What's ahead

Read my lips: Taxes

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Consumer goods marketers, ad agencies and the media are facing Election Day with a surprising sense of skepticism about the likely winner, George Bush.

Though Vice President Bush is widely supported by the ad industry, even the prospect of four more years of a Republican administration has the industry on alert.

The reason is taxes. Although government regulation historically has been the foremost concern of advertisers and agencies, this year's No. 1 industry issue is the deductibility of advertising expenditures.

Whether the next president is Mr. Bush or Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis, there's a near-universal belief the next president will flirt with the notion of changing the full deductibility that advertising, as a cost of doing business, now enjoys.

See other election stories on Pages 16, 33, 60 and 76

There's a sense among industry leaders that the candidates are equally unpredictable when it comes to other major issues that confront advertising, whether it's ad bans, ad regulation or the creeping activism of states.

"Two months is the only difference between Bush and Dukakis when it comes to deductibility," said John O'Toole, exec VP at the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

"If Mike Dukakis wins, then it will come up right away, especially if [Harvard economist and Dukakis adviser] Lawrence Summers is part of his transition team," Mr. O'Toole said. "And if George Bush wins, then it will be two or three months before ad deductibility becomes a hot item."

Mr. O'Toole said the issue has triggered "what is probably the biggest organized effort by . . . agencies, media, advertisers and anyone else involved to fight like hell. But we still know it's coming."

Jim May, exec VP-government relations for the National Association of Broadcasters, is part of that ad-tax coalition, and he sees the issue bubbling to the surface regardless of who wins the White House.

"The ad tax is not a partisan issue," said Mr. May, formerly a government affairs executive with Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of New York. "Dukakis' adviser, Summers, is a very strong advocate of limiting deductibility, but then so is Dick Schulze, a Republican congressman from Pennsyl-

Food makers jump on microwave kids' meals

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Microwaveable meals for children are the hot new category in food, and three new products are rushing to grab a piece of the action.

Marketers are so eager to explore the potential of nutritious, shelf-stable children's meals that two companies almost ended up with similar products carrying the same name.

While moving its Kid's Kitchen entrees into three test markets (AA, Oct. 17), Geo. A. Hormel & Co. discovered that an entrepreneurial company in Denver, Great American Food Co., was doing concept tests on a line of children's meals called Kids' Kitchen in one of those markets.

After meeting with Hormel, Great American Food changed the name of its product to Kids' Cupboard, sources say. The line should be ready for market within the next six months.

But former Beatrice Cos. executive Mary Anne Jackson beat them both to the punch.

Her new company, My Own Meals Inc., this month will launch the first broadcast advertising for My Own Meal, five shelf-stable meals being moved into Midwestern markets.

The basic premise of all three lines is simple: Parents, particularly working mothers, have less time to prepare hot, nutritious meals but still want their children to have them.

"I think it's a category that has

Retailer shifts strategy

Can Sears pull it off?

By KATE FITZGERALD

When analysts meet with Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s management today, the key question they will be asking is whether the stores really can be transformed into low-price winners.

Last week, Sears left many questions unanswered when it announced a major restructuring, including abandoning periodic sales in favor of "everyday low prices." The restructuring prompted many buyout rumors on Wall Street.

Transforming itself into a low-price competitor like K mart Corp. will require more than the plans outlined on paper by Sears Chairman Edward Brennan.

Analysts say the nation's leading retailer would need to change its stores physically as well as philosophically. It would also have to significantly cut costs, including advertising, analysts say.

"We get the impression that Sears is trying to copy K mart with its new strategy, but it can't do it with its physical makeup," said Steve DiMaggio, retail analyst with Roney & Co. "Sears is in malls, while K marts are free standing, low-overhead operations. People don't leave Sears with shopping carts full of merchandise; they go there to find certain items they know have good quality and value.

"This [new pricing] strategy could wreck Sears' existing equity with consumers. It all may backfire."

The consensus is that Sears is striving to copy the formulas of the leading mass merchandisers, but the

Nissan's Infiniti to get $50M push

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Still a year away from introducing its first cars, Nissan's Infiniti division is amassing a $50 million advertising war chest to reinforce its marketing strategy.

The unit of Nissan Motor Corp. USA also has answered one of the stickiest questions associated with any Japanese car importer trying to establish a new, upscale division: How closely will the new division be linked with the older, more established unit?

Infiniti's answer: Corporate "parentage" will be included in all advertising.

"You have to have parentage to be successful in the luxury car market," William Bruce, Infiniti VP-general manager, said at a press conference last week. Research completed by the division's ad agency, Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Boston and Los Angeles, has shown that U.S. consumers will accept the notion that Nissan can manufacture a luxury car.

"We'll position the division first and the hardware second, but the ads will always say 'Created by Nissan Motor Corp.,' " Mr. Bruce said.

The tagline may be modified, he added, but Infiniti's link with its corporate parent consistently will be emphasized. "We have to prove that we have the craftsmanship, the quality . . . and in the first year we'll spend to do that."

Mr. Bruce said Infiniti's first-year budget will be 2½ times greater than the $20 million introductory budget American Honda Motor Co. spent for its Acura division in 1985.

Infiniti's situation is somewhat different from Acura's. With Honda's strong existing image, Acura wanted to create a separate identity for the division.

Like Honda, Toyota Motor Sales USA enjoys a strong, positive image in the U.S., one that might overshadow its own Lexus luxury car [illegible].

But Nissan is in the middle establishing its admittedly weak U.S. image. Mr. Bruce believes Infiniti will help polish the Nissan marque. "The division will influence Nissan greatly," he said. "It will be a major facet in the image enhancement."

Big Mac wins ad recall race after Games

By SCOTT HUME

Like the Summer Olympics that dominated the month, the September advertising awareness survey has produced some surprising winners and losers.

Turning in a gold medal performance was McDonald's Corp. advertising, which was the month's best-recalled, both overall (unaided) and specifically among fast-food restaurant chains.

Coca-Cola Co. may have spent as much as $50 million on Olympic TV advertising (AA, Sept. 12), and it co-sponsored McDonald's "When the U.S. Wins, You Win" in-store scratch-card game. It made the awareness top 10 once again, but it dropped from second place to a tie for third.

Coca-Cola saw its biggest gain when survey respondents specifically were asked which soft-drink advertising they recalled first. Brand Coca-Cola's share of first mentions jumped 6.6 points to 35%, placing right behind brand Pepsi's 37.3%. A month earlier, Pepsi had held a strong 37.9% to 28.4% lead over Coca-Cola.

Sharing third place with Coca-Cola were Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser and Bud Light brands (which ranked fourth in August). A-B broke new TV spots during the Olympics coverage for both brands.

Miller Brewing Co., which advertised its sponsorship of the U.S Olympic Training Center, returned to the top 10. Its advertising tied for the No. 7 spot with General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet.

GM was the exclusive automotive advertiser during NBC's coverage—a designation that cost the automaker about $40 million in advertising—yet Ford Motor Co. managed to rank higher (tied for No. 5) than Chevrolet in top-of-mind awareness.

Even more surprising, when survey respondents were asked which auto marketer's advertising they recalled first, Ford got 26.3% of first mentions, up from 21.8% a month earlier. Chevrolet was second with 22.2%.

Somewhat shocking is the number of advertisers that spent millions of dollars on Olympic broadcast sponsorships but apparently reaped little or no awareness benefits.

Exclusive imported-auto advertisers Hyundai Motor America and American Isuzu Motors failed to get any mentions in the overall adWatch survey. Neither were such Olympic advertisers as Domino's Pizza, Visa International, Philips Lighting or the U.S. Army.

And GM's Oldsmobile broke its "New generation of Olds" campaign during the Games but wasn't rewarded with a single mention.

The Olympic Games weren't the month's only contests of note: There's also a presidential campaign under way and scores of state and local elections about to be decided.

That's brought the usual post-Labor Day surge in political advertising, which moved to fifth from ninth place in September on the list of best-recalled advertising.

AdWatch is a joint project of Advertising Age and SRI Research Center. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that first comes to mind both overall and in specific product categories.

In September, 1,011 people were polled by phone. The survey has a margin of error of 3.1%.

Among other significant changes in the September survey:

- IBM Corp. almost pulled even in the computer category. IBM's share of first mentions rose 6.2 points from August to 28.8% in September, compared with Apple's 29.3% share. Radio Shack was third last month with a 2.3% share.
- Bartles & Jaymes took a 3.7-point tumble last month in the wine category. Its 12.2% share placed second to advertising for parent E&J Gallo Winery's wines, which received 15.2% of first mentions. Banfi Vintners' Riunite was third with a 9.1% share.#

Quayle link puts chain in spotlight

Pulliam papers seen as takeover target; questions arise over trust, Arizona losses, 'News' woes

By Robert Corya

Notoriety sometimes arrives with the subtlety of a sledgehammer.

Central Newspapers Inc., owner of the Indianapolis News and Indianapolis Star, hardly had time to deny a report that Gannett Co. had offered $1.2 billion for the chain when Vice President George Bush announced that Sen. J. Danforth Quayle (R., Ind.)—the 41-year-old Hoosier with family ties to CNI—was his choice for a running mate.

Life became noticeably more hectic for Frank E. Russell, president-ceo of the chain that publishes five other dailies and four Sunday papers in Indiana and Arizona, including the Arizona Republic and Phoenix Gazette.

"Within 10 hours of Dan's selection I took 57 media calls, and they are still coming in," says Mr. Russell, who already was busier than a pressman with a broken web.

Despite media reports touting his history as a newspaperman, Sen. Quayle's relationship to CNI has not had a noticeable effect on circulation or advertising. "There's not been any change that I know of," says Wayne Wallace, CNI assistant treasurer.

CNI also recently put a proposed secondary public stock offering, announced in January, on hold. The decision was based on the deterioration in newspaper stocks, says Mr. Russell, adding that it was not related to reports of acquisition offers.

The stock proposal was prompted by some shareholders wanting to raise cash. Although the delay was attributed to market conditions, the reports of CNI buyouts above $1 billion were considerably more than the stock sale was expected to bring.

A trust left by CNI founder Eugene Pulliam stipulated CNI's 24-year-old controlling trust would run 99 years. Eugene Pulliam, his 74-year-old son and Sen. Quayle's uncle, maintains the trust is unbreakable; others disagree.

"The official answer is it cannot [be broken]. That's what the lawyers will tell you," says Beurt A. SerVaas, Indianapolis-based publisher and industrialist, who has about 1% of CNI stock. "But the Louisville trust [of the Bingham family] was broken. "It takes a beneficiary [of the trust] to bring action in court," he says, adding that he acquired his stock from a beneficiary.

The Pulliam papers would be a sound investment, says Hylton Philipson, president-ceo of Henry Ansbacher Inc., which reports that an unidentified chain has placed an offer of up to $1.5 billion to purchase CNI.

Buyers of other chains have paid $1,000 and higher per subscriber. With a chainwide circulation of about 880,000, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations, a buyer at that reported price would

Rick Friedman/Black Star

Indiana Sen. J. Danforth Quayle's selection as George Bush's running mate has drawn a good deal of interest to Central Newspapers Inc., the chain founded by Sen. Quayle's grandfather.

An occasional black sheep

Given that the founder's grandson is running for vice president on the Republican ticket, Central Newspapers Inc. is perceived to be staunchly Republican.

Contributing to that impression is the fact that Charles W. Fairbanks, whose family owns an estimated 30% of CNI stock, served as vice president during President Theodore Roosevelt's administration.

However, J. Danforth Quayle's grandfather, the late Eugene C. Pulliam, proved to be bipartisan on the day before the 1964 elections when he threw his support in a Page 1 editorial to Rodger Branigin, the Democratic candidate for Indiana governor.

The following day was the end of incumbent Lt. Gov. Richard Ristine's political ambitions.

A similar performance concerning tomorrow's presidential election is not expected.

NEWSPAPER RIVALS: Battle by the bay

Bay papers leave no zone unturned

'Times,' 'Tribune' bombard ever-widening base of readers with color, inserts, new sections

St. Petersburg Times touts itself as "Tampa Bay's Largest Newspaper."

By Fred W. Wright Jr.

While initial salvos have stilled, close combat continues to flare in zones covered by the Tampa-St. Petersburg newspapers.

In 1987 the St. Petersburg Times and the Tampa Tribune entered into a serious battle for the more than 1.6 million Tampa Bay area residents. Although the focus is on the six-county area of principal coverage, the competition has spread across Florida.

"New residents come down here without preconceived notions," says Bill Diaz, president, Ellis, Diaz/Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Tampa. The struggle is to become the clear-cut leader in what "we now call the Tampa Bay area," he says. Both papers are being positioned to accept that title. Slogans label the Tribune "Tampa Bay's Newspaper" and the Times "Tampa Bay's Largest Newspaper."

In late 1987, both papers for the first time launched extensive TV and radio advertising. Director of Advertising Al Corey estimates the Times spent $250,000 in TV production and air time, while Tribune VP-General Manager James Urbanski says its TV budget has been $1 million both this year and last. Ensslin & Hall is the Times agency of record, and Benito Advertising is the Tribune agency.

The competition has produced better newspapers, says Mr. Diaz. "The look, the increased color [including color comics], the business inserts, the sections that cater to a wider spectrum of reader interests . . . from the advertising standpoint, the competition has been good."

Tribune ad revenues (national, regional and classified) are up 8% the first six months of 1988, compared to the same period 1987; including a 7% rate increase effective January 1. The Times ad rates increased 14% since October 1987; revenues are unavailable.

The Tribune boasts the greatest circulation gain, with a 9.9% increase for the six-month period ending March 31, 1988, vs. the same period last year, according to Audit Bureau of Circulations. The Tribune's daily circulation is 258,129; Sunday is 347,209.

The Times has the greater volume with 339,428 daily circulation in the same six-month period, a 7.8% gain over the same period last year. Its Sunday circulation hit 429,722, a 5.6% gain.

The Tribune's circulation, as of March 31, was spread over 33 counties, reduced to 31 as of October. The Times circulates in 13 counties, with 70 zoned editions per week. In the five west coast counties, the major battleground, the Times shows the greatest increase in numbers and percentage, says Rob Althaus, Times director of circulation.

The Tribune offers 76 zoned editions a week in 13 of its 31 counties. "We have more zoned editions, a more sophisticated zoning program, than any other newspaper in America," says Mr. Urbanski.

The number of Tribune sales racks was doubled in 1987 to 14,000 statewide, as was the number of staffers in the newsroom and bureaus. More Tribune reporters cover the state capital in Tallahassee than any other Florida paper.

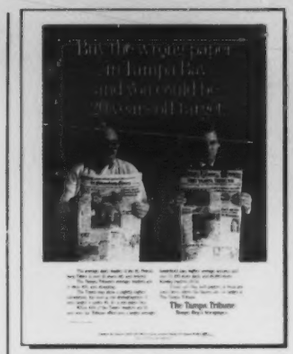
Both publications are busy adding staff in each other's primary territory. The Times boosted its Tampa/Hillsborough County bureau by 47 people to 50, while the Tribune opened a new St. Petersburg/Pinellas County bureau with 36 employees.

In February 1987 the Tribune started adding $45 million in new presses; Times Publishing is finishing a 100,000 square-foot headquarters.

Management of both papers agree that private ownership gives certain advantages.

Mr. Urbanski says the Tribune management has a job to satisfy its Media General (publicly held) stockholders. "We do the very best we can and maintain the reasonable profit that they expect. We don't have unlimited resources, but we do have a very understanding corporation," he says.

At the Times (privately owned), big money decisions can often be made quickly. A board meeting can be "called from a standing start in 15 minutes," says Andrew Barnes, chairman, president and ceo, citing how a recent decision to spend $700,000 on a circulation move came about within 72 hours. "If you need to serve distant masters, you can't do that."



The Tampa Tribune prints 76 zoned editions a week in 13 of its 31 counties.

Barnes latest in 'newsies' line

Andrew Barnes (r.) succeeds Eugene Patterson at Times Publishing Co.

The day that Andrew Barnes took over Times Publishing Co., he crossed the street to the Florida National Bank and placed a sealed envelope in a St. Petersburg Times' safety deposit box. In that envelope is a piece of paper bearing the name of his successor.

The ritual was carried over from his predecessor who followed the plans of founder Nelson Poynter.

Although Mr. Barnes has known for 10 years that he would take the reins of Times Publishing, he says, "the thought of it can make your stomach hurt." It will mean, "I'm working more time [now] than I propose to work the rest of my life." Mr. Barnes became chairman-ceo on Nov. 1 after Eugene Patterson retired at 65.

Contributing to Mr. Barnes' stomach ache is the legacy he will follow. Mr. Patterson came to the Times Publishing Co. in 1971, with a Pulitzer Prize for distinguished commentary. When he arrived, the Times had annual revenues of about $100 million. Mr. Patterson leaves company with annual revenues close to $200 million, and with two more Pulitzers.

Mr. Barnes, 49, says he hopes the transition will go unnoticed by the newspaper's readers and advertisers. "I will succeed him rather than replace him," he says. "The public will not see the difference. The staff will not see the difference."

"There may be small changes in management style, but there is no reason to believe the character of the newspaper will change significantly," says Elwood M. Wardlow, associate director of the American Press Institute.

However, the Times has committed itself to spend nearly $5 million over the next several years on expansion and improvements. "We're putting our dough into establishing a more regular customer in these nuclear area," says Mr. Barnes. "All we're really doing is following what's happening in the community. The Tampa Bay area is functioning now as a unit."

Mr. Barnes' selection to succeed Mr. Patterson follows a tradition at the privately owned company that keeps what Mr. Barnes refers to as "newsies" at the top spot: "'Newsies' have always run the company. The editorial side has to come first. The editor has to make the final decision —it means when it comes to a crunch, news wins," he says.

The two men worked together for 15 years at the Times and three years before that at the Washington Post. They see their roles with a common eye. "He's taught me a great deal and if I didn't agree in substance and detail, I wouldn't have gone on working with him," Mr. Barnes says of Mr. Patterson.

One change will be the increased time the ceo spends at the office. Mr. Patterson, a leading figure in print media, was highly sought as a consultant and speaker; Mr. Barnes will travel less.

The company, which also owns five business magazines, will continue to grow, Mr. Barnes says, but the pace may slacken temporarily. "With a new administration, it's not a year to take bold plunges, but to be conservative fiscally," he says.

Mr. Barnes is a 1961 graduate of Harvard University. After two years at the Providence [R.I.] Journal and two years in the Army, he spent eight years at the Washington Post. In 1969 he received the Alicia Patterson Fellowship for studying urban change in Europe and Africa.

"I think Gene should be commended for coming up with Andy, he'll be a fine chief executive. He's smart as a whip," says Don Baldwin, founding director of the Poynter Institute for Media Studies.

Backed by New York Times Co., the Gwinnett Daily News is targeting more of the Atlanta area.

NEWSPAPER RIVALS: Pressure on Peachtree Street

Growing Gwinnett marches on Atlanta

If metro papers 'aren't worried, then why did they go out to Gwinnett and give away newspapers?'

By JoBeth McDaniel

Gwinnett Daily News vending boxes sit on nearly every corner along Peachtree Street, Atlanta's main artery. It is a long way from the newspaper's headquarters, located more than 20 miles northeast, yet sales are brisk.

The paper's 30,000 circulation has been attributed to its slick redesign and 10¢ price—compared with the 25¢ Journal-Constitution.

Although the paper's circulation is a fraction of the 453,000 sold by Cox Enterprises' Journal-Constitution, the metro area boxes are considered yet another volley in a newspaper war that may stretch into the next century, when Gwinnett County's population is predicted to increase from 1988's 316,200 to 700,000.

The News boxes are not an attempt to make inroads in downtown Atlanta, says John Morton, newspaper analyst at Lynch, Jones & Ryan. "Many people who live in Gwinnett County commute to Atlanta; this is an introduction, a way to reach them," he says.

Box sales are "marginal," says Jack Harrison, president of the New York Times Co. regional group. "I don't think we should have them there."

While both newspapers deny the existence of a battle, speculation has been rampant since New York Times Co. first began negotiating the $88.2 million purchase last summer.

It is difficult to find objective observers of this skirmish. One industry source, who requested anonymity for fear of losing business, says he doubts that the Atlanta newspapers' managers are as unconcerned as they let on.

"They know the New York Times didn't pay that price just to have a small county newspaper. If [the Atlanta newspapers] aren't worried, then why did they go out to Gwinnett and give away newspapers?" he says, referring to promotional giveaways this spring on the streets of Gwinnett.

"If you draw a half moon from I-20 to I-75, there are 500,000 yuppies with no brand loyalty to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution. They [the Daily News] will wind up being the newspaper for north Atlanta."

Growing Gwinnett

"Too much has been made of [the competition]," says Jay Smith, publisher of the Journal-Constitution. "We sell 40,000 newspapers in Gwinnett.

"Our total circulation is 460,000. It's not all that significant. It's just one small piece of our circulation area," Mr. Smith says.

But in October, the Journal-Constitution expanded its weekly Gwinnett EXTRA insert to seven days, after bumping it up to six days in April. And it stations 25 reporters in Gwinnett compared with the News' 50-plus.

The silence may break this month, when the Audit Bureau of Circulations' figures for the six months ending Sept. 30 are published.

The Daily News is spreading the word to media buyers that its unaudited figures reveal a hefty 30% circulation increase since March 31, up more than 9,000.

"We have had a significant increase in circulation since March 31, 1988," says Mr. Harrison. However, "increases have been nominal outside Gwinnett County," he adds.

The Constitution claims equally significant circulation growth.

Company statistics show the Constitution is up 14,000 over last year. "The Journal is even with a year ago, and that's with a price increase," Mr. Smith says.

Mr. Morton suggests the two Cox papers have plans for the suburbs.

"They will penetrate as much as it is economically feasible to do. That area [Gwinnett, Cobb, and Fulton north of Atlanta] is one great suburban sprawl. I'm sure it's in their plans to make the market larger," he says.

Mr. Harrison acknowledges an interest in expansion. "It's public knowledge that we tried to buy the Marietta Daily Journal, [circulation 24,000] and we'll continue to try to buy it."

Advertisers in the Daily News illustrate the paper's reach beyond county borders. J.C. Penney Co., for example, advertises five suburban stores, none of which are in Gwinnett.

The Daily News has been aggressive in attracting Atlanta advertisers. Ogilvy & Mather/Atlanta media planner Stacy McNeil buys them for C&S Bank and Hardee's, instead of the EXTRA edition, because of the "higher quality environment," she says.

"EXTRA is a free paper. I prefer to buy paid circulation." Ms. McNeil says the Daily News is planning to "give Atlanta a run for their money."

The Gwinnett ad sales staff has made it clear that the paper will be expanding, not only through promotion but also with the number of boxes placed metro-wide. "It seems to be working," she says.

Don Fitzpatrick, newspaper ad director at Home Depot, also picks the Daily News for Gwinnett coverage, despite discounts being offered by the EXTRA editions. "We like to be in the local paper," he says.

The new design and a switch from afternoon to morning distribution debuted May 2. It was supervised by Seymour Topping, director-editorial development of the Times regional group. One of the most visible changes is in the masthead, where Gwinnett is downsized and Daily News is enlarged.

Mr. Topping says the changes were not aimed at expanding into the city or other suburbs.

"We don't have any intention of going into Atlanta. The paper is for Gwinnett County. We are a Gwinnett paper going for Gwinnett. We'll compete as hard as we can for circulation. Anything beyond that is just speculation."

Mr. Smith says the Atlanta papers will continue to focus on the 18-county area, with the core five counties, Fulton, Cobb, DeKalb, Clayton and Gwinnett each having local EXTRA editions.

"We've increased staff in Cobb and North Fulton. We've redirected how we look at the community," Mr. Smith says. "It represents a truer metropolitan report, more like concentric circles spreading out. Atlanta continues to think of itself as one very large community instead of a collection of smaller communities."

NEWSPAPER RIVALS: Antagonism in Anchorage

Economy buffets Anchorage papers

'Daily News' builds lead, but still not profitable

By Sally J. Suddock

Bill Tobin remembers the afternoon in 1979, when the owners of the Anchorage Daily News came to call. "Kay Fanning, [outgoing] News owner, C.K. [Charles Kenny] McClatchy, [the new owner] and his people said they came to let us know there was no animosity; they weren't going to spend a lot of money to drive us out of business," says Mr. Tobin, VP, editor in chief of rival The Anchorage Times. "They were just going to make the News profitable."

While the Times has not been driven out of business, the Daily News has been inflicting damage in the process of becoming "just profitable."

In nine years the Daily News has grown from a daily morning circulation of 12,000 to more than 55,103, while the afternoon Times has seen its readership decline from a dominant 50,000 in 1979 to less than 36,208 in 1988. As of March 1988, the News reports 71,285 in circulation for its Sunday editions, vs. the Times' 41,500.

The Anchorage Times has steadily lost circulation over the last decade.

"We do intend to fight back," says Times General Manager Fred Hofer. "The Times has been here since 1915 and we intend to be here in 2015, and we intend to be the best local newspaper."

The Times is in the process of developing an ad campaign, handled by Ken Flynn Advertising. Budget and strategy are not being disclosed.

In mid-September the News launched a TV campaign emphasizing its comprehensive coverage and closing with the tagline "The Anchorage Daily News: The newspaper that's good all day."

"We want more people to choose the News as their only newspaper to read and advertise in," says Publisher Jerry Grilly.

"The goal of the campaign was to increase market share," says Graham Biddle, partner at News agency Mischler-Biddle Advertising. The spots were designed to increase home delivery, promote features as all-day reading and introduce an "Impulse" lifestyle section and "Monday Briefing" of statistics such as births/deaths, arrests, bankruptcy filings, meetings.

The McClatchy resources—reported in the Alaska Advocate to be $75 million to $100 million in 1979—gave the 40-year-old newspaper the financial strength to compete with the Times, which had dominated the market since the '30s when the Atwood family purchased the paper.

The News, however, has not made a profit since the takeover, says Mr. Grilly, in part because of incurring expenses to improve the operation.

Within weeks of acquiring the News, McClatchy Newspapers changed the management, started beefing up advertising and circulation departments, planning a new physical plant, adding editorial staff and upgrading production equipment.

St. Petersburg. Tampa. Clearwater.

Many cities comprise Tampa Bay, Florida's largest and wealthiest market. But only one newspaper unites these communities, moving more products and services — the St. Petersburg Times.

Read by 693,100 adults every day and 775,800 adults on Sunday, the Times delivers Tampa Bay's largest audience.

It's an upscale , too. A single advertising insertion in the Times reaches more college educated adults, more chief wage earners and more top income households than the metro area's second newspaper. More importantly, the Times delivers Tampa Bay's largest share of buying prospects in nearly every product category.

Maverick McClatchy plays by own rules

Emphasis on strong news product pays dividends

By Alice Z. Cuneo

Charles Kenny "C.K." McClatchy probably did not make many friends in his January speech to fellow editors at the annual Press-Enterprise lecture. As he discussed the impact of newspaper ownership changes, the editor and chairman of McClatchy Newspapers came right out and named Donrey Media Group, Thomson Newspapers and Lesher Communications as the three worst chains in the nation.

"It seems obvious by looking at their papers that they don't give a fig about quality and probably care less about criticism from the likes of me," he said. "But they do care about their bottom lines."

Mr. McClatchy believes the way to gain advertising revenue is to build circulation, and the way to build circulation is through a strong news product.

"The club doesn't speak about its members that way," says Ben H. Bagdikian, a faculty member and former dean of the University of California at Berkeley graduate school of journalism.

But Mr. McClatchy, who is credited with modernizing his chain after taking over from his aunt, Eleanor McClatchy, in 1978, was willing to run the risk.

The outspoken Mr. McClatchy, whose flagship Sacramento Bee has a strong reputation for investigative reporting and local news, also took on Gannett Co., noting that it moves its editors from city to city every four years. He also said the editors' future success depends "more on his corporate report card than his relationship and his contributions to the local community."

Although Mr. McClatchy has not made a profit on the Anchorage Daily News, he points to circulation gains of his 1979 Alaska acquisition (see related story on Page S-8).

"To get the penetration a newspaper needs to be very successful, you have to put out a superior product, and that costs money," says Mr. McClatchy.

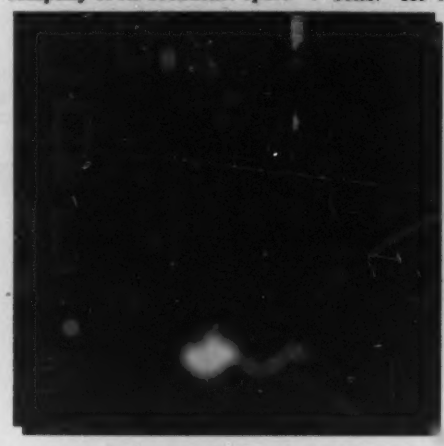
The News added a Sunday edition, bought a pennysaver to increase classified ads and poured money into the news operation, he says. "A key decision was to open up the news hole, matching the local, national and international news of the competition."

The moves produced "an odd paper full of news and hardly any advertising," Mr. McClatchy says. That lack of advertising didn't last long as the paper aggressively worked to attract advertisers as well as readers.

In addition to garnering a majority of the market's ad linage and 60% of its daily and Sunday circulation, by this summer the Anchorage paper has won awards for investigative reporting, photography, design, writing, sports coverage and special sections.

"We put out a quality newspaper. We went from being out of the ball game to winning the ball game," Mr. McClatchy says.

Besides the newspaper war, Mr. McClatchy faced a number of union battles at the Sacramento Bee and has divested the company of its broadcast operations. "We found we do extremely well at publishing newspapers—we decided it was wise to concentrate in that area," he says.



C.K. McClatchy was willing to take risks to modernize his newspaper chain.

The chain recently purchased Senior Spectrum, which publishes 10 tabloid newspapers with a combined circulation of 187,000 in 39 California counties. The papers are aimed at readers over 50. "It's a niche market we see as increasingly important," he says, adding that he plans expansion.

Mr. McClatchy, 61, and a graduate of Stanford University, worked in his early career at the Washington Post, and served as assistant press secretary for Adlai Stevenson's presidential campaign.

Starting as a Sacramento Bee reporter in 1958, he became chairman of the corporate board 30 years later and represents the fourth generation of his family to head the newspaper, which began in 1857.

Although described as soft-spoken and gentlemanly, Mr. McClatchy is an occasional tennis player with a reputation among his colleagues for competitiveness and a "steel backbone." He fought a $250 million lawsuit brought by Sen. Paul Laxalt (R., Nev.) over a story about funds being skimmed from a Carson City, Nev., casino co-owned by Sen. Laxalt. Although both men claim vindication, Sen. Laxalt dropped the suit in June 1987.

Mr. McClatchy says the forced sale of the Bingham family-owned Louisville paper led him to look for ways to keep his newspapers under family control. "I was worried about what could happen 15 to 20 years from now when you can't anticipate what might develop. If a few members of the family wanted to sell their stock . . . they would not be in a position to break up the company," he says.

The February sale of 10% of the company's stock—with unequal voting rights on class A and B stock—"hasn't changed things very much for the day-to-day operations," says Mr. McClatchy.

Some analysts and investors center concerns on short-term profits, he says. "We always were interested in the long term and we still are." ■

Solid base of U.S. advertisers propels Irish tabloids

The Irish Voice speaks to the upwardly mobile Irish-Americans interested in ethnic publishing.

Irish Echo is building via new supplements and coverage of music, sports and business.

By Fannie Weinstein

A young upstart in ethnic publishing, the Irish Voice, has started a bit of a tussle with the 60-year-old Irish Echo.

The New York-based publications contend there is room for two weekly tabloids that serve the Irish community. The Echo has a circulation of 56,000, according to Claire Grimes, owner and publisher; the Voice boasts a circulation of 55,000, says Publisher Niall O'Dowd. The Voice has applied for an audit by the Audit Bureau of Circulations, and the Echo is considering a similar request.

Both newspapers benefit from advertisers trying to reach the more than 100,000 undocumented Irish that have flooded the U.S. because of Ireland's bleak economy.

Readership and ad sales also have been buoyed by a surge in ethnic interest among Irish Americans wanting news from tribution strategies increased circulation to more than 25,000 after one year.

In 1983, the News surpassed the Times when its circulation climbed to more than 50,000 compared with the Times' 49,000.

As the Times' circulation began to flag in 1985, the News intensified its promotion, telemarketing and distribution campaigns.

Advertising rates were deep-discounted in 1979 to less than $5 per column inch compared with the Times' $8 per inch rate. They then edged up slightly from 1980 to 1983, and reached near parity with the Times at $11 to $12 per inch in 1984.

While the Times lowered display ad rates to $11.75 per column inch in 1987, the News steadily increased its rates to $17.50 in 1987, and again by 15% in first quarter 1988.

The News may be gaining market share, but the collapse of oil prices in 1986 has created some problems. Annual average combined circulation, according to Audit Bureau of Circulations, of both newspapers is currently 90,800, down from 91,300 in 1987 and 94,500 in 1986, its peak year, because of population declines resulting from the oil market downturn.

Because of falling circulation, the News may be looking for profits by penetrating other parts of the state, says Jeffrey Wilson, general manager of the Juneau Empire. "We think, the [September Fairbanks Daily News-Miner] offer was kind of ironic given Mr. McClatchy's recent comments in the trades decrying the evils of chain ownership," Mr. Wilson says.

The News cut 100 employees in 1987 to the current level of 300, Mr. Grilly says. Ad linage is down from 2.1 million inches in 1987 to 1.2 million inches in 1988, for calendar year-to-date August 1988, according to Allied Daily Newspaper reports, "but our operating margin was better," he says.

The Times ad linage is down to 1.05 million inches in 1988, from 1.9 million inches in 1987. Market share for 1988 is 54% News, 46% Times. Mr. Hofer projects a total of 3.5 million inches for 1988.

Ad linage declines are a result of less business activity, says Mr. Hofer. Montgomery Ward & Co., a big advertiser, closed in late 1987, J.C. Penney Co. has trimmed back, and "several hundred small businesses have gone bankrupt."

"The Times made a costly mistake in assuming the News could never dislodge Bob Atwood's paper from its market dominance," says Mr. Wilson.

"When we formed the Committee for Two Newspapers in the 1970s," says Robert Goldberg, Anchorage attorney, "Our concern was the need for competition—for two independently published newspapers."

"It would be a terrible tragedy if the consequences of the News' recovery was the closing of the Times . . . Wouldn't it be ironic if those of us who steadfastly supported the News found ourselves, two decades later, working for the Times," says Mr. Goldberg.

Vanishing independents

Despite rising costs and slow growth, papers strong takeover targets

By Belinda Hulin-Salkin

Newspapers are hotter takeover targets than ad agencies these days.

Over the last two years, some 169 daily papers and countless numbers of shoppers and weeklies have changed hands. Many of them are former independent papers bought by small and medium-size chains.

Analysts expect the rate of newspaper acquisitions to decline this year because so few independent targets remain available. However, in an era of economic uncertainty and predicted slow growth for individual newspapers, newspaper properties are fetching top dollar.

"The newspaper industry is facing a lot of problems . . . rising newsprint costs, higher postage rates, slow growth. You'd think in view of that, prices would start to diminish," says D. Robert Segal, president of Freedom Newspapers.

"But they aren't. It's become the 'in thing' to want to own a newspaper," he says.

Belinda Hulin-Salkin is a New Jersey-based free-lance writer and a frequent contributor to Special Report.

Every potential acquisition target has been fingered, says Leo Bogart, exec VP of the Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

"Some newspapers are less than viable and others steadfastly remain independent. But the possible candidates are no secret," Mr. Bogart says.

Why newspaper groups are so eager to augment their print holdings in the face of declining readership and advertising is a mystery to some. But corporate growth through acquisitions makes good sense in the newspaper business, says Ken Noble, first VP at PaineWebber.

"Chains of all sizes have been acquiring newspapers whenever they can, and that's been true as far back as one can observe," says Mr. Noble.

"Newspaper circulation vs. household and population growth has been declining for 40 years, but newspapers still have a good cash flow. That combination of low unit growth for existing papers, plus high cash flow, makes growth via acquisitions very attractive to chains."

Acquisitions also create economies of scale, Mr. Noble says. Better deals can be made on newsprint and supplies, and regional chains often can consolidate printing operations.

By offering network buys through a single national sales office, publishers make individual small and middle-market papers more attractive to national advertisers.

At one time, many small and medium-size chains limited their holdings to one or two regions of the country. Today, Mr. Noble says, geographic diversity is a buffer against regional economic swings.

Stauffer Communications has acquired papers in the Lakeland and Tampa-St. Petersburg, Fla.-area and in the budding high-tech corridor of Oak Ridge, Tenn.

"Prior to that, our activity has been in the Plains agricultural states, which have been somewhat depressed," says Kenneth Bronson, VP-newspapers of the $135 million company.

"We're trying to diversify our holdings; we look at the market and its potential," Mr. Bronson says.

Family-owned newspapers and chains are prime acquisition candidates. Heirs often feel no obligation to continue the clan's journal, and as newspaper profits get divided among more and more heirs, the legacy's hold on individual family members becomes tenuous.

"The future value of many papers is uncertain, and a lot of owners are thinking, 'If I'm ever going to sell, now's the time,'" says Hylton M. Philipson, president-ceo of Henry Ansbacher Inc., an investment banking firm involved in newspaper acquisitions.

Ireland and information on U.S. issues that affect them in their new homeland. Stories about immigration and Northern Ireland's civil strife are in virtually every issue.

The nationally distributed, full-color Voice was launched last December partly because of the success of its sister publication, Irish America, a 3-year-old magazine, says Mr. O'Dowd.

"There is an upwardly mobile, Irish-American community that is interested in new-look ethnic publishing," he says, pointing to the magazine's 7,000 start-up circulation and its current 62,100 subscriptions and newsstand sales of 20,300, according to its own figures.

Irish America is published by Irish America Inc., and the Voice is published by Irish Tribune Inc. Mr. O'Dowd is the majority shareholder in both companies; Jefferson Smurfit PLC, a multinational publishing and paper goods company in Ireland, holds a significant minority interest in each.

Mr. O'Dowd, who says his newspaper "questions a lot of sacred cows," argues that today's immigrants want a product they can identify with. Although immigration has been the focal point of editorial coverage, there has been coverage of issues such as AIDS.

The strength of the Voice's ad base "is that we've been accepted so quickly by the bedrock advertisers in the community—the bars, the entertainment, the Irish societies," says Mr. O'Dowd.

The Voice has averaged 19.9 ad pages in issues averaging roughly 47.5 total pages since its debut, he says. For the 10-week period ending Oct. 8, Mr. O'Dowd cites an average 21.5 ad pages out of 48 total pages.

Mr. O'Dowd is hoping to boost ad sales through a package he plans to offer with other ethnic publishers to attract national advertisers offers to pay several times gross revenues for a property, it takes the newspaper business to turn it down," he says.

A price multiple of four times gross revenues is not an unrealistic price for a family newspaper today, says Mr. Philipson. "Most chains come to these deals with lots of cash from deals they made in the past at better valuations," says Mr. Philipson.

"They're prepared to overpay to expand. Besides, some of these properties only come available once in a lifetime."

Roy Park, ceo of the $139 million Park Communications, says his company doesn't negotiate for newspapers using revenue or circulation-based cost formulas. "We study the market, we find out what the competition is doing and figure out how well we can expect to do," he says. "Then we set our price accordingly.

"Of course we go over the details of their operation for where we might do better. In some cases, the papers have been well run; we can't expect to improve on their performance," Mr. Park says.

Park has acquired several family-owned newspapers over the last two years, some the result of invitations to bid.

"I keep in touch with newspaper owners through industry organizations," Mr. Park says.

"Often I tell them, 'If you ever want to sell, give me a call,' and they do."

The newspaper owners often are local people who don't want the word to get out that they're selling until it's done, he says.

Most newspaper chain executives say they don't hold potential acquisitions to any preconceived location or operating criteria.

"It all depends on what's available," says Fred Smith, president of Donrey Media Group. "We've bought papers that were in fine shape and some that needed help."

A well-funded buyer can often upgrade the quality of a newspaper almost overnight. Freedom Newspapers expects to spend more than $90 million on plant improvements in the next three years.

In spite of the problems facing the newspaper industry, analysts say newspaper stocks have bottomed out and could be one of the best long-term investments around.

"The cost picture is improving," says Mr. Noble. "We may have to wait until 1990 or beyond to see improvements in the advertising picture and there are still potential threats from electronic media. But newspapers still have the longest useful life of anything around."

Small chains will be the next likely targets."I think there will be some group consolidation," says Mr. Bronson. "Not too much, I hope. I'd hate to see only five or six media companies in the U.S. five years from now."

the Echo and don't see a reason to stop, says Mr. O'Dowd.

The Voice has not "affected us in the slightest," says Ms. Grimes, who took over the Echo in September 1987. "Our figures are still going up."

The average number of pages per issue has grown from 52 in 1987 to 64 in 1988; a roughly 50-50 advertising-to-editorial ratio has been maintained.

Ms. Grimes folded the Boston Irish Echo this past summer. "It had nothing to do with competition," she says.

The national section will debut this month, says Ms. Grimes. Articles from around the country will be featured along with the four pages of Boston news already included in the Echo.

Current plans call for the expanded Echo to be sold at newsstands and Irish specialty shops nationwide, and in vending machines in Washington. Nonsubscription sales are concentrated in the New York area.

In addition to continuing to report on immigration, Northern Ireland and social activities, Ms. Grimes plans to introduce new supplements—on top of the seven that appeared this year—increase coverage in music and sports and add a second business page.

Graphically, she says, the ongoing cosmetic changes—the Echo added color in August—will continue into 1989.

"We're a moderate paper in our approach, in our appearance, and we take a moderate view of things generally," she says. "That has been our position and will remain so."

Newspapers lose by a landslide

Image-intent national candidates continue to avoid print advertising

By Ed Fitch

What if they had an election and nobody voted?

Newspaper advertising executives might respond by dancing in the streets. A poor turnout in tomorrow's presidential election might help newspapers reverse a 20-year slide in political advertising, says David Simonson, exec VP, National Newspaper Association.

Newspapers were expecting no vote of confidence from national politicians this year (AA, July 18), and that is exactly what they received. "There's been some action at the local and state level as a result of aggressive selling by newspapers," Mr. Simonson says. "But there's been nothing nationally."

Local newspapers attract ads because they can target grassroots campaign dollars, says James Cutie, national advertising director at The New York Times. The movement away from major newspapers started in 1964, and this year's dearth of activity mirrors 1980 and 1984, he says.

Despite doing special sections on both conventions and an election preview, national newspaper USA Today "has not seen one bit of business from a candidate," says Jim Gath, manager-special sales.

A primary reason seems to be that contemporary campaign styles do not fit the medium. "This is a campaign of spot images and no substance," Mr. Simonson says.

Erich Linker, senior VP-advertising at The New York Times, concurs, saying the emphasis on image over substance has hurt newspapers. "The media consultants steer the majority of dollars to TV."

Mr. Gath puts it more bluntly: "These guys are in love with TV."

Mr. Simonson says he will be surprised if 50% of registered voters cast ballots tomorrow, claiming this will send a message to political media strategists. "It will say that X percentage of voters have been disenfranchised and are asking for something of substance, something that can't be delivered in 20-second bites." Newspapers, he says, are a logical medium for more detailed messages.

The ephemeral nature of the current campaign keeps politicians from using print, says Mr. Gath. "They don't want to commit to putting anything down on paper. They don't want their opponent to be able to hold up a newspaper ad and say, 'This is what you said about that issue in black and white,' when they're changing their positions constantly."

Still, some of the newspapers' woes are self inflicted. "We haven't been very aggressive as an industry," Mr. Simonson says. NNA launched a $100,000 campaign via Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, Minneapolis, last spring to tout the value of newspaper ads. He says the campaign will continue, and he expects 1990 and 1992 election advertising to improve as a result.

spend more than $1,700 per subscriber. Although Mr. Wallace says, "We've never seen an offer, we're still waiting," stockholder Mr. SerVaas says he has a letter informing him of the $1.5 billion offer.

The CNI chain is indeed a money maker. Earnings of nearly $33 million in fiscal 1987 ending the last week in December, on revenues of $403 million, were up 2.7% from fiscal 1986.

Still, there remain problems within CNI. Circulation at the Indianapolis News, a 119-year-old afternoon paper, peaked at 200,000 subscribers in 1965 with the demise of the Scripps-Howard Indianapolis Times. Today it reports 120,000, according to 1988 Audit Bureau of Circulations, in a city showing dramatic growth.

Some suggest the stagnation stems from management policies. Mr. Russell refuses to comment, saying management style is open to a variety of interpretations. Staffers contend that editorially, both papers operate without much interference from management.

With a long-standing policy of hiring interns straight out of college, the addition of solid writing and reporting talent is not a top priority, according to industry observers. The News' problems reflect a mediocre editorial lineup, sources say.

Mr. Russell acknowledges that both newspapers have shown only modest gains in advertising revenues, and that the Phoenix operation has been losing ad linage for six quarters. (According to Forbes, May 24, Mr. Pulliam may be ready to sell his Phoenix papers. Industry insiders say this would bolster the Indianapolis operations and increase the price of non-voting stock that might be put up for sale to the public.)

"I don't know when the last sales person called on me; we get mailings but no personal contacts," says Norman Wilkens, VP-account supervisor, Montgomery Zuckerman Davis, Indianapolis. That is probably a result of being "the only game in town. You have to damn the Star and the News with faint praise. They are responsive to our clients' wishes, but the personal follow-up with agencies is missing.

Industry observers contend that if the News continues to stagnate, it will be folded into the morning Star

However, CNI is interested in expanding. "I've looked at several properties in the last four or five years, including Sparks Newspapers," says Mr. Russell. "We're really only interested in print, and the searches will continue."

Market crunch bites into 'WSJ' circulation

By IRA TEINOWITZ

The stock market plunge may be ancient history to veteran traders, but it's still posing major circulation woes for The Wall Street Journal, according to the latest Audit Bureau of Circulations FAS-FAX reports.

WSJ blamed the October 1987 market tumble for the continued deterioration of its circulation through September.

Daily circulation averaged 1,869,950 in the six months ended Sept. 30, a 4.7% drop from the same period last year. More significantly perhaps, WSJ reported circulation dropped 7.7% from the 2,025,176 it averaged for the six months ended March 31.

"This is in line with what we reported earlier," said Charles N. Stabler, deputy director of corporate relations for WSJ parent Dow Jones & Co., New York.

"The crash of a year ago is continuing to affect us in circulation and advertising," he said. "A lot of individual investors have been out of the market since the crash, and there have been a number of layoffs in Wall Street firms, as many as 15,000. Those were our readers."

WSJ wasn't alone in reporting circulation losses. The New York Post's circulation dropped 20.3% to 550,473. Most of that drop apparently happened late last year or early this year; circulation fell less than 1% from the end of March.

The New York Times reported daily circulation up 1.6%, with Sunday circulation up less than 1%. Meanwhile, the New York Daily News reported a very slight dip in daily circulation with Sunday sales dropping a bit more. The Daily News said its Sunday circulation was down 2.9% from a year ago and 3.4% from March 30, when the paper had shown a slight increase. Newsday reported circulation up 6.2% daily and 3.6% on Sunday.

In Chicago, where the Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago Tribune have both seen price hikes and delivery problems, daily circulation dropped 4.2% and 6.5%, respectively.

Other cities showed considerable variety in the latest statistics.

The Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News reported declines in both daily and Sunday circulation. Meanwhile, the Houston Chronicle and The Houston Post both reported circulation increases.

In Los Angeles, the Daily News' Sunday edition is still outselling the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, though the Herald Examiner outsells the Daily News on weekdays.

In Kansas City, Mo., The Kansas City Star, an afternoon paper, continued to lose circulation, but its morning rival, The Kansas City Times (both owned by Capital Cities/ABC) picked up only a little. The Star's daily circulation has dropped a hefty 13.2% to 184,882 in the last year. Meanwhile the Times circulation has risen 1.2% to 281,886.

In a similar situation, The Milwaukee Journal, an evening paper, saw its circulation drop 6.4% to 269,155, at the same time the morning Milwaukee Sentinel fell 4.1% to 181,298.

Florida cities and Sun Belt areas like Phoenix, Ariz., are doing well, with most major newspapers reporting circulation increases.

However, the Fort Lauderdale (Fla.) News, the evening paper of the Tribune Co.'s News and Sun-Sentinel duo, showed circulation plummeting 29.8% to 39,833. The Sun-Sentinel more than made up the difference, reporting a 17.2% jump to 184,200 weekdays and a 6.8% increase on Sundays to 296,404.

The Miami News, which Cox Enterprises has already said it will close or sell by yearend, reported daily circulation fell 13.9% to 47,736. The Miami Herald reported its circulation rose 0.7% daily to 401,423.#

must work out a deal with one partner, former creative director Sergio Graciotti who wants to sell.

Lintas:Worldwide is another agency looking to grow via acquisition in Brazil. Local agency President Ivan Pinto said Duailibi, Petit, Zaragoza, one of the top creative agencies, would be a good fit because Interpublic and DPZ share many clients—including Johnson & Johnson, General Motors Corp., Sterling Drug, Coca-Cola Co. and Nestle.

Mr. Pinto denied the two are talking but admitted he's looking at four acquisition candidates.

Sister agency McCann plans to buy a "highly creative strategic planning-oriented agency" among the top 25 in Brazil by Dec. 15, Mr. Olesen said. Another acquisition is planned for next year.

The Brazilian acquisitions could be merged into the existing McCann-Erickson Publicidade, stand alone or share some functions with the existing agency and work separately on others, he said.

Mexico

In Mexico, talk is leading to deals.

Saatchi bought into affiliate Iconic, Mexico City, hoping to merge it with its other affiliate, Montenegro-Saatchi & Saatchi, sources say. The deal was constructed just in time for Saatchi to pitch for $3 million of PepsiCo business (AA, Oct. 17).

BBDO Worldwide is thinking of merging its Dieste, Merino/BBDO with another agency.

Sources say Publicidad Ferrer, Mexico's No. 1 agency, is in discussions with a multinational.

Mexico is also on McCann's shopping list, even though McCann already ranks No. 2.

Argentina

"In Argentina, you need critical mass to be able to offer all services," said Nelson Homem de Mello, Young & Rubicam president for Latin America.

To develop that mass, Y&R de Argentina, Buenos Aires, merged Aug. 1 with a local agency to form Funes Straschnoy Dreyfus/Young & Rubicam—part of the recent flurry of Argentine acquisitions.

Other agencies are doing the same. Earlier this year, Lintas:Worldwide bought Colonnese & Asociados and merged into its existing office to form Colonnese-Lintas.

Saatchi is negotiating to buy a small stake in affiliate Lautrec SA.

Sources say DDB Needham Worldwide is negotiating to buy Argentina's Ruben Maril SA de Publicidad for $1 million. However, Ruben Maril, a partner, said he has an affiliation with DDB but is talking to several international agencies. Mr. Maril said he's helping DDB look for a Brazilian agency as well.#

a consumer chooses to buy a roll of Kodak film, for example, "the brand itself has added value because it has been advertised."

Lately, the role of advertising has assumed even greater proportions. Brand names (and parent companies) are bought and sold on the basis of that certain intangible equity known as "goodwill," established for the most part through advertising.

"Clients are more appreciative of the role of advertising today, [because] they've developed a monetary value of the brand franchise," says Allen Rosenshine, president-ceo of Omnicom Group. "A brand is a marketable commodity." While the value of brand names has made advertising more crucial, many ad experts believe the role of advertising as a sales tool has declined over the years.

"There was a time when many [products] would have a gigantic edge simply because they were on TV," Mr. Manning says. Now, "appearing on the TV screen in and of itself is meaningless."

Media advertising may defend a client's product against a competitor's attack on market share, but it alone won't guarantee a sales increase. It can, however, help "sell" a political candidate to voters, promote the use of condoms to fight AIDS or raise awareness of the dangers of drug abuse.

"Most advertising doesn't really sell anything the way a clerk in a store does," says Alan Gottesman, an ad industry analyst at PaineWebber. In most cases "it doesn't compel a purchase."

The most it can do, the experts say, is to boost awareness, encourage trial and convey psychological benefits to people who already use the brand, particularly if it is well-established and in a slow-growth category.

People may see themselves as part of the "Pepsi generation," and so will feel good about drinking Pepsi, but they won't necessarily go out and buy it. Yet sales of some products clearly are driven by advertising that compels consumers to act.

A direct-response TV commercial or print ad may prompt someone to buy a book, order a vegetable slicer or join a club. A commercial will encourage a moviegoer to see a new film or to stay away. A spot for a supermarket will tell shoppers what's on sale this week, prompting an unexpected purchase.

Most established consumer products and services now, however, are more alike than ever before, and new products aren't very new—or without competition—for very long. Rosser Reeves' USP (Unique Selling Proposition) may not be dead, but achieving that lasting element of exclusivity in an ad claim is becoming much more difficult in today's marketplace.

This change has "created a demand for advertising to deal with more and more intangible aspects . . . the emotional quotient of a brand as opposed to functional aspect," Mr. Rosenshine says.

At the same time, the audiences that advertisers seek—and the media that reach them—are becoming even more fragmented. Consumers, despite their seeming fascination with advertising's creative process, are more cynical and disbelieving about its claims.

It's not that advertising's power has diminished for most other products. Instead, its form has merely changed.

Broadly defined, advertising now more widely encompasses and encourages alternatives to traditional marketing methods, such as couponing and other price promotions, to store events, civic events, public relations and even touch-screen computers that generate recipes. Advertising itself has become more regionalized and targeted to specific uses and users of a product.

In the glory days of television in the mid-1950s, says Thomas Leahy, president of CBS Marketing, "our industry was so powerful that the sheer exposure of your message would sell your products. It evolved to a matter of not the value of the process or exposure, but simply, 'What is it going to cost you?' "

Some of that power still exists in countries newly exposed to the American-style inundation of advertising.

In parts of Latin America, for example, "a much greater part of the task is truly information and education, in which housewives and families who are just moving into an economic class where they consider products and services [are] really hungry for information that puts it in a social usage," says Norman Brown, chairman-ceo of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications. "It helps them operate in the world they're developing into."

But in the U.S., times have changed, and the novelty of advertising exposure is dulled because virtually every company is doing it. Instead, "What's really happening is there's a broader definition of what advertising is," says Anthony Adams, marketing research director at Campbell Soup Co.

"There are a lot more tools to be used, and used in combination with one another. It's not just the chocolate, vanilla and strawberry flavors," he says.

Today's more segmented market works against this three-flavored TV, radio and print mix because it demands advertising that can get "closer to the consumer, and some of those media are more distant. A diet of only traditional media won't do it," Mr. Adams says.

Campbell, for example, has resurrected its "Campbell Kids" characters not only for advertising but also in-store appearances and other promotions. (It also has returned to a popular slogan of yesteryear, "M'm M'm good!" a softer-sell, more emotional approach than the previous "Soup is good food" campaign.)

Five or 10 years ago, alternative marketing methods were "inconsequential," he adds. Now, the new media may account for as much as 10% of a total marketing budget, particularly with less-advertised brands. And managers for such brands—defined as those with TV budgets of $5 million or less—are now being instructed to look more seriously at these strategies because their budgets are below the spending "threshold" required for effective TV reach.

Ad agencies have been working overtime to accommodate themselves to this gradual shift toward "below-the-line" marketing services. Most larger shops have acquired, started or affiliated with sales-promotion companies, direct marketing, public relations, even grocery-store shelf-space management.

Ogilvy & Mather is doing pioneering work in scanner research involving the Universal Product Code and supermarket checkout counters. Such moves are partly defensive to prevent the drainage of ad revenue by other alternatives offered by competing companies.

But there is a more aggressive side to this development. Agency executives are also concerned about "orchestrating" client marketing efforts so they can control the overall consumer message with an effective, cohesive approach. The job of creating wonderful ads—the essence of agency activity—remains at the heart of the process. But increasingly, agency chiefs worry that too much promotion without general advertising will erode brand loyalty and ultimately harm product quality and marketing innovation, all of which adds up to a loss of agency revenues. So they push forward on all fronts.

"I think advertising in the most general sense prevents competing companies from ultimately losing profits and margins to the price factor," Mr. Rosenshine says. "Even though we see so much of advertising and marketing effort going into sales promotion, the fact of the matter is that sales promotion only works effectively when you're promoting something with inherent value," he adds. "You can't promote sales of a piece of crap."

Giving brands their identity—and thus a perceived value—is advertising's unique power, even if, as studies suggest, pricing remains the more powerful short-term sales motivator. "I think for consumer products and services, advertising is just absolutely essential," says Mr. Brown. "I don't think brands can exist without it; certainly they cannot flourish. It's kind of the final visible point of competition between companies."

The waning of "generic," unbranded or no-name products, so popular in the 1970s when inflation was soaring in the U.S., reflects the notion that price alone won't do the job, these executives say. Innovation, quality and the image of brands remain crucial elements in the modern day sales mix, especially in markets where status matters. Would a Mercedes-Benz retain the cachet that it carries based on high price or quality manufacturing alone? Aren't consumers wary of heavily discounted price deals that seem too good to be true?

The final irony, it seems, is that the public's fascination with advertising coincides with its waning ability to directly move products off store shelves. But while many in the industry complain that advertising alone doesn't do the job it once did, the various "newer" marketing disciplines are wholly dependent on advertising to lay the groundwork by creating value and demand among consumers.

Advertising, however entertaining or dull, in its best form articulates the most significant point of difference between products. "When brands get weakened or products disappear, and price is the only differentiator, quality will go down as well," says Kenneth Roman, chairman-ceo of Ogilvy Group. "I challenge you to tell me of one enduring success story built on price alone."

As American society ages, growth slows and segments become harder to pinpoint, marketers making their decisions on how best to reach their targets will put a greater burden on research experts.

A SYMPHONY OF DEMOGRAPHIC CHANGE

By Peter Francese

Demographic, social and economic change has transformed America's consumer markets from being relatively easy pickings to elusive targets. Today's intensely segmented consumer markets are more difficult to predict, harder to reach and tougher to sell than ever before.

In such an environment it should surprise no one that advertisers are searching for greater efficiencies in their marketing and advertising efforts. For many years management's focus has been on achieving greater efficiency in operations such as manufacturing and distribution. But with the shift to smaller production runs of more highly differentiated products, the focus has switched to selling more products with the same or fewer advertising and promotion dollars.

An essential element for more efficient marketing is a deeper understanding of the consumers. Such understanding is rarely achieved but is, in fact, an ongoing process as consumer trends unfold and the American family changes in size and character.

As we prepare to move into the last decade of the 20th century there are many population and household trends developing simultaneously. Some, like the shortage of teen-agers, are in evidence now, while others will appear throughout the decade.

There are three major themes in a symphony of demographic change with numerous melodies: slowing population and household growth; an aging society; and an increasing fragmentation of consumer markets.

Each of these trends and its components has implications for the way we communicate with consumers, the types of messages that will influence their behavior and the kinds of products and services they will buy.

The U.S. population is growing at just under 1% per year, and each year the rate of growth diminishes slightly. The major component of growth is births, which at 3.8 million have hit a post-baby boom record low. No one expects total births to keep rising. In fact, they will probably start declining sometime in the early 1990s.

The other component, immigration, was growing rapidly and adding between 500,000 and a million-plus people a year (including an estimate of illegal aliens) until Congress passed a law prohibiting the employment of undocumented workers. That may have serious long-term consequences for U.S. growth because as the population ages, deaths will rise to completely offset births. Thus, within the next generation, immigration will be our major, and perhaps only, source of growth.

Households grew more than twice as rapidly as the population during the 1970s, fueling the demand for all kinds of home-related products. But now households are increasing only 1.5 times as fast, and during the 1990s the growth rates will probably converge.

The major consequence of such low overall growth is to intensify the search for the more rapidly growing consumer market segments. Almost no one will be satisfied with sales or profit growth of less than 1% per year. The trick is to find a faster-growing segment before everyone else does or build market share faster than anyone else. Some of the faster-growing segments are demographic (i.e., working women with very young children), but some are geographic (i.e., Florida). A sharper focus on demographic segments means advertisers will want more tightly targeted marketing campaigns. A heightened awareness of geographic segments means more regional and local marketing.

The U.S. population is aging because while the number of young adults is falling, the number of mid-age and very old people is rising rapidly.

The number of young adults 18 to 24 peaked in the early 1980s and is projected to decline by 12% over the next decade. This means 3 million fewer young people to buy beer, motorcycles, college educations, cosmetics or any of the other products and services designed for young consumers.

There is some evidence that this decline may be at least partly offset by rising purchasing power due to higher wages and lower unemployment rates. But while cash-register receipts may not be deeply affected, there will be fewer people to run those cash registers or to provide service in what is supposed to be a service-based economy. This suggests the telephone and the modem-equipped personal computer as major shopping methods of the future. Catalogs now in print form will more and more appear in video form and the sales clerk will more often appear as the UPS or U.S. Postal Service delivery person.

Contrary to the decline in young adults is the growing children-and-young-teen market. By 1998 5-to-12-year-olds will be up 10%, and they are becoming more sophisticated consumers every year. This should mean growth for videogames, preteen cosmetics and microwavable foods.

The majority of young children today who live with both parents see them go to work every weekday. So they are taking on more household responsibilities and making more and bigger purchasing decisions for themselves.

The difference between men's and women's patterns of lifetime employment becomes smaller every year. Even a majority of mothers with children under age 1 are in the labor force. This tends to fragment purchasing behavior within the household, change how people spend their time and reduce the opportunities for reaching an entire household with one advertising message.

The second reason why this country is getting older is the middle-aging of the baby boom. During the next decade the market segment called the baby boom will move into middle age and in the process move into its peak earning and spending years. In 1990 the baby boom will be about 25 to 44 years old. In 2000, therefore, they will be about 35 to 54. During the next decade the 35-to-44 age segment will grow 23% and the 45-to-54 age segment will jump 45% (see chart). Only one other age segment will grow faster: those 85 and older. But no other group earns or spends more than the 45-to-54s.

According to the latest Consumer Expenditure Survey consumers 45 to 54 spend the most on food (30% above average), apparel (38% above average) and retirement programs (54% above average). The 35-to-44 age group spends the most on housing, motor vehicles and entertainment. At current spending levels a 1% increase in householders 35 to 54 means an additional $8.9 billion in consumer expenditures.

As they get older, baby boomers are also settling down in a big way. Interstate mobility declines sharply with age and people in their 30s and 40s take a greater interest in their home and in their community. As baby boomers put down roots, literally and figuratively, the lawn and landscape business should do well. But there will also be a greater interest in locally produced products. This suggests greater regional as well as market-by-market diversity and a rising demand for advertising with a local flavor and content.

Time management is a big deal with baby boomers. Thus, retailers that find ways to reduce the time and hassle of shopping will get a competitive edge. This may mean an increase in the information content (i.e., size, location, colors available, price, etc.) of print advertising to make shopping easier.

One market segment for which time does not seem a problem is the mature market. No consumer group has been more misunderstood than older Americans. The 55-plus market has had a reputation for high growth but low income. For part of this market that is the case, but for the majority the exact opposite is true.

Almost half the nation's discretionary income accrues to people 55 or older. The word growth hardly describes most of this population. Three quarters of the mature market is between 55 and 75; the Census Bureau projects that age group to grow a mere 3% in the next 10 years. But the population 75 to 84 is expected to grow rapidly (up 21%) and the oldest old, those 85-plus, will increase 51% by 1998. More than one in five people in this oldest age group are in a nursing home or hospital and many live at or near poverty.

The rapid increase in the very old will create enormous demand for long-term health-care facilities along with the staff and equipment to maintain them. Assuming present levels of institutionalization, there will be a demand for about one new 100-bed nursing home every single day for the next 10 years. The sharp contrasts in the mature market—from bedridden patients in a nursing home to big spenders on a cruise—makes this consumer group difficult to understand and hard to communicate with.

More than the usual amount of consumer research is required before developing an advertising campaign targeted to this group.

The fragmentation of consumer markets combined with increasingly diverse media means more research information about consumers must be processed and understood before making marketing and advertising decisions.

If advertisers, responding to demographic change, want more highly targeted messages and more efficiency in their advertising efforts, perhaps they also will obtain research to measure marketing performance.

Maybe a new breed of efficiency expert will move from the assembly line to the advertising agency.

More complicated consumer markets require more sophisticated consumer research and the integration of consumer information into media buying and marketing decisions. This is what is often called data base marketing and never have we had more data with which to do such marketing.

In a few years billions of figures from the 1990 census will be available to add to the already substantial output from scanner cash registers, people meters, panel diaries, syndicated studies and market-research reports. The marketing or advertising director in the 1990s will have to be extraordinarily skilled at processing vast amounts of data and making sense of it.

Out of those oceans of numbers must come not only a better understanding of consumer markets but also more precise measurements of marketing efficiency. ■

Top of New England!

This Northeast market is one of America's most livable cities. The market is also ranked in the Top 10 of U.S. Metro's in per household retail sales. It is an ADI Market which is the fastest growing in New England over the past 5 years ... (growing at more than twice the rate of Boston, Hartford, Springfield, and Providence in population!)

The forecast through 1989 shows this market surpassing the growth of all other New England ADI's in population, households, total retail sales, and effective buying income.

It is the fastest growing ADI in one of America's fastest growing and more prosperous regions.

Where's this market that is tops in New England in growth? Shouldn't it be somewhere near the top of your New England media buy?

New deals coming?

Philip Morris brand-builders still not satisfied

By FRED DANZIG and JUDANN DAGNOLI

NEW YORK—If the group efforts to buy RJR Nabisco fail, Philip Morris Cos.—fresh from its $13 billion buyout of Kraft—might be prepared to shell out more cash to acquire some Nabisco brands.

This possibility emerged during an interview with PM Chairman Hamish Maxwell, Vice Chairman William Murray and Staff VP-Marketing Planning James J. Morgan, who discussed with ADVERTISING AGE the pragmatic ways in which they approach their growth-oriented marketing and corporate goals.

"We've got a full plate now" with Kraft, said Mr. Maxwell, but he added that if Kraft had not been targeted, "we could have had some interest in some Nabisco business if it had become available. Certainly we have some interest in certain parts of their business right now."

Would he be interested in participating in a group bid? He would consider this under certain circumstances, he said.

Mr. Maxwell also agreed with those who say no corporation should feel itself immune from the possibility of takeover.

"That's true for IBM and it has to be true for Philip Morris," he said. "But I think you'd have to say the financing of the RJR deal"—the prime example of a group takeover bid—"is turning out to be not as easy as all that," he added (see story on Page 2).

Concerning additional acquisitions, Mr. Maxwell said: "You've got to do acquisitions and also develop brands of your own in order to grow. Every food company has grown through acquisition. We feel we have a balance in the way we've grown."

He added: "We want to be the best; we don't really care if we're the biggest or not. We are concerned that people don't think that somehow or other [the Kraft acquisition] adds tremendously to a major amount of change."

Mr. Maxwell took issue with those who believe Philip Morris now has retailer clout that poses a threat to its competitors.

"Even with Kraft, we're still a relatively minor factor in grocery stores, as a whole," said Mr. Maxwell. "Look at the shelves and what's on them and you'll find that we are still a small part of the store.

"The customer," he said, referring both to the supermarket chains and consumers, "is still king."

The Kraft deal, the PM executives said, has strengthened PM's global presence as a U.S. food company that must compete with giant foreign-owned food marketers such as Nestle and Unilever.

Mr. Murray added that the Kraft buy should also give PM a greater "critical mass" in Europe as access to a common

Bush adman aims attack at Madison Ave.

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Having sold America on George Bush for president, Roger Ailes now may be setting his sights on corporate America.

The extraordinary political adman, who showed America Mike Dukakis' tank, Willie Horton's prison and Boston Harbor's dead fish, thinks he can do for General Motors Corp. or RJR Nabisco what he did for the vice president—create ads that reach the audience, inform the audience and move product off the shelf. And do it better than "Madison Avenue boys," as he calls them.

"Sure, I'd do [product] advertising," he said. "I've even had some calls from corporations."

Mr. Ailes' blunt assessment of product advertising was part of a lengthy interview with ADVERTISING AGE after last week's election and right before leaving Washington for a one-day vacation in Florida.

Following that, Mr. Ailes moves on to another campaign, this one in Costa Rica where client Raphael Calderone is running for president. The interview follows:

ADVERTISING AGE: Would you do product advertising?

Roger Ailes: [I see] how much waste there is in most ad agencies' work for their clients. I realize it can be done

Rivals team up for RJR brands

Group bids a new trend in mergers

By LAURIE FREEMAN and JUDANN DAGNOLI

Group bids from strange bedfellows soon may be the norm in the next round of megamerger deals.

In the battle for RJR Nabisco, Forstmann, Little & Co. and Goldman, Sachs & Co. teamed with Procter & Gamble Co., Ralston Purina Co. and Castle & Cooke to plan an estimated $23 billion bid for the marketer's companies and brands.

Sources believe that more group bids for the tobacco/food products giant may be in the offing. RJR's food brands—which include Oreo cookies, Ritz crackers, Nabisco cereals, Milk-Bone dog biscuits and Del Monte fruits and vegetables—are generating keen interest among companies who may not be able to finance a major bid for the company on their own.

Last week, both Borden Inc. and Quaker Oats Co. said they were interested in certain RJR businesses, but indicated they were unwilling to take on enough debt to acquire the entire company.

Group bids such as the one Forstmann Little put together are becoming "the new reality," said Gordon Wade, a consultant with Cincinnati Consulting Group. "These are highly unusual times and P&G, like everyone else, is adjusting to the new economic environment it's competing in."

John Quelch, marketing professor at Harvard Business School, called it "the era of strategic alliances." Mr. Quelch said global marketing is influencing companies to work together to better compete when trade restrictions are lifted in Europe in 1992.

"These strategic alliances promise to replace regional marketing as the buzzword for 1989," he said.

Already, once-unlikely joint ventures among competing marketers are cropping up overseas, he said, particularly in research and development.

Analysts speculated the Forstmann Little group would break up RJR as follows: P&G would get Planters' salty snacks and Fleischmann's margarine; Ralston would take Milk-Bone and Nabisco cereals; Castle & Cooke would take Del Monte; and the tobacco business probably would be kept by Forstmann Little.

The major question mark is the cookie and cracker division, with an estimated price tag of nearly $4 billion; both P&G and Ralston are seen as possible buyers.

This group deal is particularly unusual for P&G.

"For P&G to act in concert with other [companies] like this is unheard of," said John T. Thomas, an executive recruiter and former P&G manager.

P&G generally shies away from acquisitions that require large debt. It also avoids hostile takeover battles, preferring instead to be a white knight.

Although the pending offer cannot be deemed hostile because it was invited by RJR's special board of directors committee, the ego-ridden bidding war promises to be a mudslinger.

The two bids already in from Shearson Lehman Hutton, Salomon Bros. and F. Ross Johnson's management group and Kohlberg, Kravis Roberts & Co. have already provoked controversy and personality clashes between the major players.

Indeed, Forstmann Little, which is leading the consumer-products

M&M/Mars candy to raise visibility with Disney link

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Mars Inc.'s M&M/Mars candy division plans to announce a multiyear strategic alliance with Walt Disney Co. as part of a new, aggressive marketing stance.

The effort will be spearheaded by Al Poe, M&M/Mars' new VP-marketing, who was known for aggressive ad spending and new-product activity when he worked on the company's pet-food business.

Mr. Poe was most recently marketing director for Mars' pet-food operations in the U.K. He arrived in Hackettstown, N.J., two weeks ago to replace John Langdon, former senior VP-marketing. Mr. Langdon now is president of Topps Chewing Gum.

The Disney tie-in signals that the secretive and insular company is looking for new ways to promote its products and is willing to enter into joint ventures with other marketers, sources said.

"One thing you'll see at Mars will be more tie-ins with the big players—Disney, Coca-Cola, McDonald's—if they can get them," a source close to Mars said. "They [Mars] will be looking for co-marketing opportunities and are trying to be more creative in looking for edges to compete in a more difficult market."

A Mars spokesman said an announcement about the company's long-term deal with Disney would probably be made this week. The company set a Nov. 30 news announcement "to unveil plans for one of the most significant business endeavors the company has ever undertaken."

Disney wouldn't comment on a new M&M/Mars link, but the two companies recently joined in back-to-school and Halloween promotions involving nine of Mars' candy brands (AA, June 6).

Sources said the promotion will feature Disney characters in network TV spots.

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York, is believed to be the agency for the promotion, although the agency wouldn't confirm it. The company's other candy agency is Backer Spielvogel Bates.

Observers familiar with Mr. Poe described him as a marketing "visionary" and credit him for major gains made by Mars' U.K. Pedigree Pet Foods business.

"He has completely shaken up Mars' thinking," said one agency source familiar with Mr. Poe.

The source said Mr. Poe was the driving force behind pet-food line and brand-name extensions that resulted in new categories and new sizes.

> "One thing you'll see at Mars will be more tie-ins with the big players—Disney, Coca-Cola, McDonald's—if they can get them."

He is said to have conceived the idea of dog drinks to complement dog foods, a new-product concept Mars is believed to be considering for introduction in the U.K.

Observers believe he will move swiftly to introduce new products in the U.S., and will pump up ad spending for existing brands.

At M&M/Mars, Mr. Poe takes on a candy business that competitors contend has been stumbling of late and been behind in new-product introductions.

Although M&M/Mars is testing Balisto, a chocolate-covered grain-based bar, and PB Max, a peanut butter chocolate bar, it hasn't had any recent national launches.

Its main competitor, Hershey Foods Co., recently bought the Cadbury-Schweppes confectionery brands in the U.S., including Mounds and Almond Joy candy bars, giving it about a 39% share of the $8 billion U.S. candy market compared with Mars' 37%.

Sears

pose of the network was to let the world know that Allstate, Coldwell Banker and Dean Witter were all part of Sears. We accomplished that."

Although Sears maintains its mission-accomplished posture, some question whether three years and $40 million in advertising were required for a basic awareness campaign. Although the financial units work together on certain services, including mortgages and home insurance, marketing heads at all three can give few solid examples of cross-selling efforts.

Fred Morache, VP-advertising & PR at Coldwell Banker, says his unit is looking to increase business by "sharing customers between members of the network" but would not elaborate. Dean Witter offers a variety of financial services through its Discover card, but "none of them have much to do with the network," says Beth Metzler, Dean Witter's PR manager. Allstate gives examples of scattered efforts to snare new insurance customers outside Sears stores, but the company has no master plan for the activities.

Despite Sears' insistence that it is satisfied with the network as is, there are strong indications that the company has no choice but to retrench from an overly ambitious initial plan. When Sears rolled out the network, the company also opened 50 branches of the Sears Savings Bank in California. Within a few years, however, Sears began to close the branches, and today only one remains.

"We realized that a brick-and-mortar strategy of providing financial services wasn't the way to go," Mr. Fairweather says. Also, financial centers are located in only 330 of Sears' 825 stores.

Still, Sears has reaped some successes with the network. In 1987, the three units' combined revenues rose 22% to $20.7 billion: $15.6 billion from Allstate, $3.9 billion from Dean Witter and $1.2 billion from Coldwell Banker. Merchandise group revenues totaled $28.1 billion, up 3.7% from a year earlier.

Several of its competitors believe the company still has the potential to become a supermarketer of financial services.

"Sears has done quite well at gathering mortgages—in particular through Dean Witter and Coldwell Banker—quietly and without fanfare," says Marshall Dennis, executive director, National Mortgage Institute. Mr. Dennis says Sears has a "sizable" mortgage portfolio, giving the company long-term relationships with homeowners and creating future cross-selling opportunities. Sears also has an enormous combined data base of each unit's customers, plus Sears and Discover cardholders.

"We never knew what Sears' internal goals were with the financial network, and clearly they took a chance. But it's much too early to make a judgment about the future of Sears and its ability to cross-sell financial services to its retail customers," says Gerald Levy, chairman of Guaranty Savings, Milwaukee. "Sears has simply learned that it's not a slam-dunk to sell financial services. It takes a while."

One of the strongest believers in Sears' potential to become a major player in financial services is Kemper Group, a direct competitor of Allstate Insurance and Dean Witter financial services. "Anyone assuming that Sears has failed with the network at this point is completely naive," says Ira Nathanson, VP-corporate communications for Kemper Financial Services.

"Whether they do it through direct mail, in-store intercepts or telemarketing, Sears is a lot smarter than people realize, and it has a great deal of potential to market financial services very aggressively one of these days," he says. "We fully expect that it will." AA

Affinity

While some predict that the pace of affinity card introductions will slow during the next several years, others say the programs will remain popular. But they warn that the next generation of cards will reveal more about consumers' affinity to their wallets than to a group or charity. At the same time banks will be more careful about choosing partners.

"Banks are being more selective of the groups they decide to work with. Some are even going back to the sponsoring organizations and renegotiating their offers," says Greg Spagna, president of the financial services group of Market Facts research company.

He says banks are revamping their programs because research shows that consumers are interested in merchandise discounts and low interest rates—more than pass-along benefits for affinity groups. "If all of the value goes to the sponsoring organization, consumers don't respond as well," Mr. Spagna says.

Stephen Bartell, director of ID Plus, MasterCard's affinity division, echoes this refrain, saying the motivation to use the card will increasingly come from consumers' understanding of "what the card can do for them."

But he does not discount the importance of affinity ties. "We have no indication that affinity cards have peaked. In fact, more banks are coming into affinity marketing and bringing more associated groups in than ever before," Mr. Bartell says.

The concept still is evolving, although it still is billed as a something-for-everyone program. Credit-card companies and banks attract cardmembers, increase card usage and have a way to distinguish their products. The Visa study shows that affinity card holders tend to spend more—their average monthly statement was $693 compared to a systemwide Visa average of $388.

In addition, Visa found for 44% of its affinity cardholders, the affinity card was their first Visa.

Participating groups may receive fees for bringing in new cardholders, and they get a product to sell as their own. Consumers get the satisfaction of using a credit card that reinforces group allegiance and benefits the organization—and they are increasingly being lured by competitive rates and merchandising discounts.

A recent study by American Banker confirms the importance consumers place on basic economic benefits. Low interest rates and fees were the main reason 28% and 21%, respectively, acquired affinity cards. Only 11% listed benefits to sponsoring groups at the top.

Several types of cards have been created to date: product benefit cards, lifestyle cards and personality cards, among others.

Product benefit cards, for example, may offer frequent flier discounts; lifestyle cards typically involve groups of people united by common interests; personality cards play off the devotion of star gazers—the Elvis Presley affinity card claims to be the first of this type.

Amid cries of oversaturation, experts cite developing areas. Employee benefit cards may become a common company perk; retailers may switch to co-branding cards instead of running independent charge operations; marketers may zero in on ethnic groups—two affinity programs already target Armenians; and mall cards with frequent-shopper benefits will pop up in key residential/commercial areas.

Most think that the next stage of affinity card development will be dominated by similar highly targeted, localized programs. "The next surge of activity will be highly segmented programs, by lifestyle, by geographic region and by demographic characteristics," says John Pollock, publisher of Bank Credit Observer.

Kelly Wells, president of Future Resources, an affinity program developer, thinks "most of the good cause-related groups are gone." Nonetheless, she's confident the basic idea is sound. "The genius of the concept is its ability to reinvent itself," Ms. Wells says.

Her company is working on several programs due next year. One, for the 400,000-member National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse, entails a tie-in with a major family magazine in the cause-related effort. Another, involving the entertainment industry, will support the Actors' Fund.

Mr. Bartell says MasterCard will "continue, wherever possible, to unearth opportunities" for new affinity programs and further enhance programs.

Whether the cards provide altruistic or materialistic perks, banks and sponsoring organizations need to be more creative in relating card benefits to the association, says John Love, publisher of Bank Network News.

"The concept of affinity cards has to go back to its roots: real benefits." AA

Coupons gain favor with U.S. shoppers

By IRA TEINOWITZ

CHICAGO—Shoppers are using coupons as much as ever and do not see coupons or other promotional devices as cheapening a product's value, according to a new study.

Fully 98% of households have used coupons in the past year and 97% of households in the past 30 days, reports a national survey of 654 households by Frankel & Co. a marketing services company.

The survey has a 2% margin of error.

But the study finds some changes in the past four years in the way consumers view coupons and other promotional programs.

Among the changes:

- Consumers are more willing to send in for rebates.
- Consumers are more likely to use coupons for brands they usually buy, and less likely to use coupons as incentives to try new brands.
- The great majority of consumers take coupons with them when they go grocery shopping.
- Shoppers are redeeming fewer coupons they get in grocery stores.
- Consumers are less likely to play rub-off games, though 48% of consumers still play the games.

The 1988 study, similar in methodology to one Frankel conducted in 1984, reported that 89% of all consumers liked coupons and 47% felt more positively toward brands that offered some sort of promotions.

Half of consumers said promotions didn't affect their overall feelings about a brand either way.

"Consumers hold a generally more favorable opinion of those brands of grocery products that offer promotional discounts of one type or another," the study reported.

Shoppers, according to the study, also appeared willing to participate in a variety of promotional programs, with 84% reporting having used free samples and 87% rebates in the past year.

The study said 62% participated in sweepstakes and 48% used proofs of purchase to get a free gift.

Don Packard, research director, said the positive feelings of consumers toward coupons was one of the study's biggest surprises.

"The magnitude of the favorability was a little bit of a surprise to me," he said, noting that there had been sales promotion industry concern that too much couponing might hurt a brand.

He attributed consumers' increased willingness to use rebates to more rebates being offered and a rise in the amount of individual rebates.

"Their value has increased over the years," he said. "Now even batteries give $1 back."#

Interpublic taps Day as its 1992 emissary

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—Barry Day has been called away from McCann-Erickson Worldwide to assess the changes 1992 will bring to the European market for Interpublic Group of Cos., the agency's parent.

Mr. Day, 54, who had been vice chairman of McCann since 1981, will become Interpublic Chairman Philip Geier Jr.'s assistant. They first worked together in 1970 when Mr. Day joined McCann as creative director of the London office and Mr. Geier became McCann London chairman.

McCann has no plans to replace Mr. Day, a flamboyant creative executive who helped the agency create global images for clients including Coca-Cola Co. and Exxon Corp. He also set up a worldwide creative team headed by Exec VP-Worldwide Creative Director Marcio Moreira.

B. Day

Other executives will be brought in to oversee agency services Mr. Day had monitored as worldwide director of professional services.

"I've got things in place at McCann, and Geier said, 'How'd you feel about getting back in harness again?' " Mr. Day said.

The year 1992 is important because governments in Europe hope to harmonize regulations by then and create a unified European marketplace.

"The key project I'll be working on is a proper assessment of what 1992 and a single European market means," he said. "Much has been said about it, written about it, which is partly true and the rest a lot of rubbish. He [Mr. Geier] wants to make it a theme this year and take an Interpublic overview.

"Phil feels that we, as European as well as worldwide leaders, should have a view on and make clients aware" of the implications of the changes in Europe, Mr. Day said.

Mr. Day said that as an emissary from Interpublic, he will be working with the company's other agencies, Lintas:Worldwide and Lowe Marschalk, as well as government officials, clients and even non-clients.

He also will work on other undisclosed projects for Interpublic.

Mr. Day began his career in 1956 as a management trainee with Lintas, where he rose to creative director. He earned bachelor's and master's degrees from Balliol College, Oxford, England.#

Audi to give TV networks second shot

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

TROY, MICH.—Audi of America will likely return to network TV in late February or early March, but isn't backing away from its long-term commitment to build an image through print.

Network and cable buys would be used to enhance the first-quarter launch of a new multivalve engine for the 90 Quattro, and in the second quarter to introduce a coupe version of the 90 series, according to Anthony Kirton, director of marketing for Audi, a unit of Volkswagen of America.

Audi and General Motors Corp.'s GMC Truck division earlier bowed out of network TV (AA, Oct. 24), each saying it would invest the money in print media, where it could better afford to build a long-term image among affluent prospects.

That decision prompted responses from "plenty of magazines" and one "pretty interested" network, Mr. Kirton said.

The money for TV represents ad spending increases specifically for the launch periods, and won't come out of the print budget, Mr. Kirton said.

"We will maintain a major print presence in 1989. We still believe it is our base medium," he said.

But, he added, "We're taking a long, hard look at cable, and we will probably be a relatively heavy user."

Cable offers a niche marketer such as Audi some of the same ability as specialty magazines to reach narrow target groups, Mr. Kirton said.#

factory progress," said Alan Gottesman, analyst at PaineWebber. "If I had to pick one [negative], it would be the new-business activity of DDB Needham," he said.

"I don't know whether it's been successfully accomplished," said Mr. Crawford of the DDB Needham merger. But he expressed confidence in Mr. Reinhard's talents. He said he attempted to lure the Needham executive to BBDO in 1980.

In reviewing Omnicom's operations, Mr. Crawford said that he's less concerned with the particulars.

"A lot of things may end up as the icing. What the cake is is the quality of operations that make up Omnicom. Sure, one wants to figure out how to maximize the operations and there are questions about integration and all that, but basically in the end how good the operating units are will spell the failure or success of Omnicom, and we can't lose sight of that."

Mr. Rosenshine, in an interview after the Nov. 4 personnel announcement, said he's "happy that we've taken [Omnicom] from consolidations and write-offs to two years of solid performance.

"DDB Needham has stabilized and BBDO continues its mandate to improve its multinational business picture. But mostly I'm happy that the creative reputation on which Omnicom is based is fully supported by the performance of the last two years."

Mr. Rosenshine said his move back to BBDO was prompted by a desire to be closer to the advertising business, and by Mr. Campbell's decision to retire. Other sources cited personality conflicts between Mr. Campbell and other BBDO executives as the reason for his departure.

Some sources said Mr. Campbell's leadership of BBDO was never viewed as more than a "transitional" role quickly agreed upon because Mr. Campbell was the only logical executive to succeed Mr. Rosenshine when Omnicom was formed.

Financial analysts generally view Omnicom's progress since April 1986 as steady but somewhat slow.

"Clearly, they've gone down the long road and made strong gains in melding the cultures together," Mr. Ostroff said. "You've got to give Allen a lot of credit for that. But they've clearly not lived up to expectations yet, and financially the company has not lit the world on fire."

He cited cash management problems as one example of less-than-strict controls, despite a 25% earnings gain in the third quarter and a 20% gain for the year to date.

"Personally, I think they might've been able to get a little bit further a little bit sooner," Mr. Gottesman said.

But both agree Mr. Crawford is the man to help move Omnicom beyond a transitional period. In his three years running the Met, Mr. Crawford erased deficits that ran as high as $8 million in one season, and helped reverse severe box-office declines.

In the 1988-89 season, 92% of the Met's seats have been sold. And Mr. Crawford has led the opera to resume recordings and its foreign tours for the first time in 13 years.

"Either I was going to stay here for the rest of my active career or this was going to be the thing that changed my mind," he said of an offer by Mr. Rosenshine in early September to replace him as head of Omnicom. "It isn't as though I didn't know the place, so I decided to do it."

"Omnicom is interesting to me because, in the first place, it's a recent development and people are wondering how well it will work. It would not interest me to run an ad agency per se, because my skills are much better suited to the parent company.

"There you have to be a lot of things, an entrepreneur, a manager, a psychiatrist and a promoter. It's fascinating to me."

Mr. Crawford is a 22-year BBDO veteran, joining the agency in 1963 as a VP-management supervisor after working stints at Benton & Bowles and Ted Bates Co. and after two years as ad manager of Chesebrough-Pond's.

In his early years, he worked with Mr. Rosenshine, then a young copywriter, on the Gillette Co. account.

ALLEN ROSENSHINE

In 1969, Mr. Crawford became head of BBDO's fledgling international division, then took over worldwide financial and administrative responsibilities in 1974, just as the company went public.

He became president of BBDO International in 1975, ceo in 1977 and chairman in 1982, shortly before leaving to join the Met full-time.

He said he had no involvement in the formation of Omnicom and has had no more than a social relationship with Mr. Rosenshine and Philip Dusenberry, BBDO vice-chairman and New York chairman-ceo, since leaving the agency.

He sees parallels between the agency and opera worlds, as both are dominated by creativity and egos, and not necessarily in that order.

"Basically, people are interested in the star system," Mr. Crawford said. "Here there's Luciano Pavarotti, [Placido] Domingo and Joan Sutherland. There it's who's going to make the advertising. Phil Dusenberry, Keith [Reinhard] and Allen [Rosenshine]. I happen to believe in brand names and what you build into them."

Observers describe Mr. Crawford as a forthright and effective manager. "He's got a unique talent to let people develop on their own," said Willi Schalk, president-chief operating officer at BBDO.

"Bruce's strength is a function of his directness," Mr. Gottesman said. "The guy's a very clear thinker and there's a v short pathway between his b...n and his mouth. He's very direct and incisive, but he's not a hip-shooter."

For his part, Mr. Crawford describes himself as an effective, moderate delegator.

"My feeling is that anybody who knows me in the business would say I'm no cowboy, no casino operator and, on the other extreme, I'm not given to reliance on unnecessary financial controls.

"What I believe in is building businesses and building them based on client needs and then getting a fair price. I'll probably give other people most of the work in designing the tools. I'm most interested in individuals and designing groups, and if that style isn't desired, no one should go into business with me.

"What I'm attempting to do [at the opera] is make sure we have the best singers and conductors and composers and designers, and to create an environment and an enthusiasm for the task at hand and make it possible for people to perform to the best of their abilities. That's what running a creative or artistic-driven operation is all about."#

Omnicom, Ogilvy pact near

NEW YORK—Omnicom Group and Ogilvy & Mather are expected soon to sign their long-discussed joint media-buying agreement, possibly by Dec. 12, sources said. The flexible agreement will expand on a country-by-country basis, with the Netherlands likely to be first to start operation. Other markets to be added soon are Australia and France. Agency officials said talks were progressing but no deal was imminent.

Family Media offers discount

NEW YORK—Family Media next year will offer advertisers an "Added Impact Buys" program, a corporate ad-rate discount plan similar to incentive plans started by other magazine publishers in recent years. Discounts will be as high as 30%. Family Media's 10 consumer magazines have been organized into four categories—men, women, in-

Burger King opens door for new shop

By SCOTT HUME

Burger King Corp. all but officially threw its $200 million account open for review again last week, saying it's "looking at the option of another agency developing our new creative."

A spokeswoman declined to say how aggressively the chain is looking, but she denied a report that N W Ayer, New York, has been terminated.

Ayer "continues to develop advertising and place media for our marketing programs," the spokeswoman said.

The move comes after last week's closed-door sessions with Burger King franchisees and executives of Pillsbury Co., Burger King's parent. Pillsbury is fighting a takeover attempt by Grand Metropolitan and has suggested spinning off Burger King into a separate company.

A memo to agency personnel issued Friday by Ayer USA Chairman Jerry Siano said, in part: "We have worked at an incredibly fast pace in the last 14 months for this client, and that pace will not change. Rest assured that if our relationship should change at any time with this or any other client, you will certainly be kept informed by me."

But now, only 14 months after the largest single account shift in advertising history—and after 14 months of what one agency's chief executive called "one of the screwiest agency/client relationships I've ever seen"—history appears destined to repeat itself.

As a result, several major agencies—some of which already are making informal preparations for a Burger King review (AA, Nov. 14)—suddenly are thinking about visiting Miami over the holidays.

Burger King's statement could suggest it will review only the creative assignment, allowing Ayer to keep control of the massive media-buying network it has spent 13 months—and much money—developing and staffing to service the centralized account.

Dividing the account would allow

Gen'l Foods rethinks regional efforts

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

General Foods Corp., one of the leading proponents of regional marketing, is rethinking its strategy.

The company is measuring the degree that "regional marketing is a public relations venture by the marketing community and to what degree it is substantive," said James J. Morgan, staff VP-marketing planning at GF's parent, Philip Morris Cos.

Mr. Morgan was interviewed with Philip Morris Chairman-CEO Hamish Maxwell and Vice Chairman William Murray (AA, Nov. 14).

Since early 1987, General Foods has viewed regional marketing as the answer to grocery trade demands. Funded by promotional dollars, the local programs would develop a good working relationship with the trade to help reduce promotional allowances.

But trade pressures are still coming from chains such as Winn-Dixie Stores, which has frustrated regional marketing efforts with its demand that marketers shun special local pricings and use only national pricing policies.

Although Mr. Morgan wouldn't comment directly on the Winn-Dixie situation, he said, "There's a lot of turmoil, and that's why I say a lot of things have to get sorted out of what the reality is and what the real interests are of all the different people in the loop," especially the trade.

Mr. Morgan said he will make his recommendations to Messrs. Maxwell and Murray in the near future.

Despite General Foods' fading enthusiasm, Campbell Soup Co., another major food marketer with a head start in regional marketing, remains committed.

"We have absolutely no intention of pulling back our regional marketing program," said David Hackney, Campbell's manager of public relations. "We are convinced that's where the future lies."

The divergent reactions of the two marketers appear to be caused by their differing regional goals.

Campbell, reported to be paying no slotting allowances, doesn't regard regional programs primarily as a means of reducing trade promotion costs.

And the company's program, which sepa-

Seniors open a seniors shop

By DAGMAR MUSSEY

MUNICH—While other admen in their 60s retire, Friedrich Ortmeyer and Werner Herrwerth are starting a specialty ad agency here directed at "yuppies with wrinkles."

Mr. Ortmeyer, 61, a well-known creative freelancer, and Mr. Herrwerth, 64, who's a partner in Herrwerth & Partner here, claim Senior-Partner is the first agency in Europe directed at the 50-to-69 age group.

"We speak the language of this group," Mr. Ortmeyer said.

Marketers are showing interest and for good reason. Currently, 27% of the West German population is between 50 and 69 years old. By the year 2000, it could be 40%.

"I cannot yet give you any names, but we've had various inquiries from the pharmaceutical industry, some consumer-goods companies, and even a food chain inquired because some youth groups become smaller and smaller," Mr. Ortmeyer said.

Members of the 50-plus group feel neglected by advertisers since ad campaigns mostly focus at the young, he said. "But this 50-plus group is very affluent here."

Senior-Partner, a subsidiary of Herrwerth & Partner, will target the 50-plus age group but still won't neglect younger groups.

Senior-Partner plans to establish contacts with working groups at various universities, since many in the 50-plus segment are going back to college and many colleges conduct studies on the group's behavior.

Ties will also be formed with political ministries and publishing houses. "The German publishers Springer, Bauer and Jahreszeiten Verlag, all in Hamburg, have tried to launch magazines for this group, but so far nobody succeeded," Mr. Ortmeyer said. "Our newly established agency will also give advice on such publishing projects."#

J&J sends Tylenol after Alka-Seltzer

By PATRICIA WINTERS

In what could be the first major attack on Miles' Alka-Seltzer in years, Johnson & Johnson will try to take some fizz out of the antacid kingpin with new Tylenol Extra-Strength Antacid.

J&J's McNeil Consumer Products Co. has moved the Tylenol antacid into Green Bay, Wis., and a few other unidentified, smaller markets.

A source close to the company said McNeil would spend at competitive levels if the product rolls nationally, though no plans for such an introduction are in place yet.

"You can look at what Alka-Seltzer spends," the source said. "You can't compete with a whisper. You'll observe that when McNeil decides to launch a new product, they do it right."

In 1987, Miles spent $48 million on its Alka-Seltzer products, Leading National Advertisers reported. J&J spent about $70 million on the complete Tylenol line.

McNeil doesn't comment on test products, a spokeswoman said.

Tylenol Extra-Strength Antacid is being supported by TV spots, themed "It makes fast work of an upset stomach," via Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York.

"This is literally the first effervescent entry I can remember . . . in years," said Robert Benezra, analyst with H.C. Wainwright & Co., noting that Bristol-Myers Co. failed with a heavily promoted entry, Resolve, in the early- to mid-1960s.

"No one has ever been able to duplicate the success of Miles" with Alka-Seltzer, he said.

Since Resolve failed, three other competing products have been tested but never rolled out: American Home Products Corp.'s Anacin Seltzer; Block Drug Co.'s Seltzer 2000; and Warner-Lambert Co.'s Bromo-Seltzer in tablet form.

Alka-Seltzer is the longtime leader in the effervescent segment of the antacid category; its only significant competitor is regular Bromo-Seltzer, which owns a small share of the market but gets little ad support.

Last year, Alka-Seltzer had an estimated 13% share of the total $870 million antacid category.

McCann-Erickson Worldwide is the agency for regular Alka-Seltzer; Wells, Rich, Greene handles Alka-Seltzer cold-remedy products.

Tylenol antacid is a testament to the strength of brand names in an economy where it's extremely difficult to launch new ones. Line extensions that cross over into other categories pervade nearly every package-goods market, from cosmetics to drugs to foods.

Tylenol already has crossed over into other categories with Tylenol Cold and Tylenol Sinus medicines. A move into antacids is considered a natural because the test product contains both an antacid and Tylenol's key analgesic, acetaminophen. Alka-Seltzer contains both an antacid and aspirin.

Expanding Tylenol also is important as the analgesic brand leader faces increasing competition in the $2.2 billion market due to the rise of ibuprofens, such as American Home Products' Advil and Bristol-Myers' Nuprin, and renewed interest in aspirin.

"They are trying to take the Tylenol name and get it into as many categories as they can because they have that brand recognition," said Elizabeth Hicks, an ana-

States may sue over airfare ads

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

Five states are threatening to sue five airlines for deceptive advertising in what could become a significant regulatory showdown.

Last week, the states notified American Airlines, British Airways, Continental Airlines, Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines by letters that surcharges must be included in the advertised fare rather than in a footnote.

State attorneys general in California, Massachusetts, New York, Texas and Washington told the airlines they must be in compliance after Nov. 30 or face lawsuits.

At press time, the airlines hadn't said whether they'd comply.

The states' action pits them against specific U.S. Department of Transportation orders that allow certain surcharges to be included in a footnote of an air-fare ad. These surcharges usually pertain to international air fares and include a $3 departure fee, a $10 customs fee and a security surcharge (usually $10).

However, the states maintain airlines that disclose surcharges through footnotes violate their respective state laws.

Writing on behalf of the five states in the Nov. 14 letter, Texas Assistant Attorney General Stephen Gardner warned the airlines, "The states are aware that certain members of the industry have voiced the opinion that state enforcement of our consumer protection laws has been pre-empted by the DOT. The states disagree. Regardless of whether DOT is willing to allow deceptive advertising, the states are not."

The who's-in-charge-here question is complicated further by a fed-

Security Pacific combines accounts

Banking on D'Arcy

By MARCY MAGIERA

LOS ANGELES—Security Pacific Corp. deposited its consolidated $20 million account for its five Western banking subsidiaries at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles.

"We were looking for an agency that can handle building a cohesive interstate image for us," said Deborah Lewis, Security Pacific first VP-director of corporate communications. "DMB&B demonstrated they can run an interstate campaign from one location."

DMB&B competed against J. Walter Thompson USA and Hal Riney & Partners for the combined account.

Riney lost $10 million in billings from the company's flagship Security Pacific National Bank. It had held the account for 15 months.

Security Pacific operates Security Pacific National Bank in California; Rainier National Bank in Washington and Alaska; Oregon Bank in Oregon; and Arizona Bank in Arizona. It will acquire Nevada National Bank in January.

DMB&B has been Arizona Bank's agency.

The consolidation also affects McCann-Erickson Worldwide, Seattle, which is losing Rainier's $4 mil-

LEADING NATIONAL ADVERTISERS

(Companies ranked 101-200)

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Spending on national advertising rose 6.7% in 1987 over the prior year to $5.73 billion for the nation's leading advertisers ranked Nos. 101-200, according to ADVERTISING AGE.

Media moguls can find encouragement in this percentage of total national ad dollars allocated to media. The nation's Top 100 national advertisers, identified by AD AGE in its Sept. 28 special issue, spent 54%, or $15.36 billion, of their $28.4 billion total national dollars in media in 1987, up from 53.8% in the prior year.

The Second 100 continued to favor spot TV, which grew 6.3% to $1.1 billion, reflecting heavy regional advertising for new product introductions. Network TV spending closed only a fraction behind at $1.02 billion, up 9.2%.

This burst by network TV gave the Second 100 11.6% of the nation's total network expenditure, up from 10.9% in 1986, while the group's spot TV expenditure slipped from 13.3% to 13.1% of the nation's spot spending. This compares with the Top 100's 1987 network percentage of 75.7%, up from 74.4%, and spot TV percentage of 40%, down from 41.4%.

Total spending in network among all advertisers in the U.S. during 1987 was $8.81 billion, and spot TV spending, $8.40 billion, according to BAR/LNA Multi-Media Service reports.

Highly volatile market conditions of 1987 and 1988—characterized by heavy acquisition and divestiture activity, the market crash of Oct. 19, 1987, and the decline of the dollar—left few of the Second 100 unscathed. Ad spending fluctuated wildly among the ranks as 25 new entries joined the list, sandwiched between chart leader GTE Corp., at $83.1 million, and No. 200, Florists' Transworld Delivery Association, at $33.1 million. The same volatility opened Top 100 slots to 13 companies that were among the Second 100 last year. Likewise, 10 companies ranked in the Top 100 for 1986 dropped into the Second 100 in 1987.

Seven of the new Second 100 entries were foreign-based, and five of them "spent" their way onto the chart by buying consumer product-oriented companies that support strong ad programs and/or seasoned brands. Along with the buyout activity came the introduction of a completely new category to 1987's Second 100—auto rental. Both Hertz and Avis entered the chart for the first time: Hertz being unbundled from Allegis Corp. (now UAL Inc.) in a management/Ford Motor Co.-led buyout venture called Park Ridge Corp., No. 157; Avis Inc., No. 165, gained its independence from Wesray Capital Corp. in a buyout by its employees. Where a company markets different products or services, categories are determined by the business that generates most of the company's sales.

Hidden in the 6.7% composite growth statistic was lower ad spending from 31 of the Second 100. Two of the major primary business categories—computers/electronics & appliances, with eight advertisers, and pharmaceuticals, with seven—recorded no gain in advertising from the prior year. However, the telephone category showed a decline of 19.2% in advertising. No. 133 US West came in as the only category member among six that didn't show an ad volume reduction. All year-to-year comparisons in this report are based on the same cast of companies.

Retailers carried much of the ad-growth load for the Second 100. Sixteen retailers comprised the category that accounted for $1.04 billion in total advertising, or 18% of the composite total. Retail spending increased 8.9% from the previous year for the same companies, and only three companies in the sector registered spending declines—No. 104 Campeau Corp., No. 120 May Department Stores Co. and No. 188 Wickes Cos.

Buyouts probably influenced the declines for all three, simply because sold units take with them their ad budgets and consolidations generally mean budget redundancies that lead to economies of scale. Toronto-based Campeau purchased for $6.7 billion Federated Department Stores in a 10-week takeover battle, and to pay off the heavy debt, sold I. Magnin, Bullock's, Filene's, Foley's, Gold Circle and MainStreet. Management at Wickes Cos. attempted to buy the retailer, but withdrew its offer this October because of deteriorating earnings, leaving the door open for a leveraged buyout proposed jointly by Blackstone Capital Partners L.P., and Wasserstein, Perella Partners L.P. Wickes's board approved the terms. May completed its acquisition of Associated Dry Goods (Lord & Taylor) in 1987.

U.S.-based companies entering the 1987 list through the acquisition route include USAir Group, No. 192, which bought Piedmont Aviation and Pacific Southwest Airlines; Primerica Corp., No. 196, formerly American Can Co., bought Smith Barney. Playtex Inc., No. 177, entered when it spun off from BCI Holdings Corp., parent of Beatrice Cos. The company recently underwent yet another ownership change in a complex buyout directed by Joel Smilow, who has led the company under five different owners since taking over the head post himself in 1969.

Acquisition provided the springboard to the Second 100 chart for five foreign companies: Bond Corp. Holdings, Perth, Australia, No. 160, entered through its acquisition of G. Heileman Brewery and Pittsburgh Brewery; No. 170 Imperial Chemical Industries PLC, London, acquired Glidden Paints and Stauffer Chemical Co. Hanson PLC, London, No. 176, seems to be running a corporate lazy Susan. It sold Glidden Paints, bought Kidde Inc. (Ertl Toys, Jacuzzi, Universal Gym, Farberware) but by mid-1988 had sold two of its bigger advertised brands—Lea & Perrins sauces and Durkee Foods. Sony Corp., No. 108, bought CBS Records, and Guinness PLC, No. 191, bought Schenley Industries (Dewar's scotch).

Acquisitions also enabled a number of companies to improve their position on the chart. No. 132 Tonka Corp. moved up when it turned white knight in acquiring Kenner Parker Toys, No. 189 in 1986; News Corp., No. 127, rose from No. 181 largely through the $3 billion acquisition of Triangle Corp., ranked No. 170 in 1986.

The acquisition craze that is changing the American business landscape left its mark of heavy debt on the Second 100, assuring more corporate spinoffs down the road. American Stores, No. 131, eyed the California strength of Lucky Stores and in 1988 bought the retailer ranked 143 in 1986, but it was believed that American acted because it was vulnerable to takeover and believed a debt-ladened balance sheet would deflect would-be suitors. Dayton Hudson Corp., No. 113, survived a takeover attempt by the Haft family of Dart Group Corp. by obtaining favorable anti-takeover legislation in Minnesota and then accumulating $339 million of its own stock. F.W. Woolworth Co., No. 109, fended off an attempted takeover by the same Dart group in early 1988 by adopting poison-pill provisions. Holiday Corp. underwent a $2.4 billion recapitalization plan that included special dividend payments and $1 billion in asset sales to keep it clear of corporate raiders.

The U.S. market lost some of its appeal to foreign companies because of the dollar's downward turn. The dollar in particular has hurt those companies repatriating large dollar volumes into a stronger currency. Auto importers, No. 186 Jaguar and No. 181 Volvo AB, each lost 6% in unit sales. They partially blame the decline on the dollar-induced higher cost of the foreign-made product and market-imposed damper on high-end products relating to the '87 stock market crash. Volvo canceled the launch of its low-priced 480 ES in 1988 because of the market downturn. But there was a silver lining in this dollar-darkened cloud for foreign companies that had money to spend. U.S. buyout targets became cheaper, evidenced by the five foreign companies that entered the Second 100 list through acquisition of U.S. companies.

The medium most affected by negative market trends was newspapers—particularly hurt by the loss of financial advertising relating to the Black Monday crunch. No. 179 Dow Jones & Co., publisher of the Wall Street Journal and Barrons, in particular felt the impact. By midyear 1988, neither publication had regained its advertising momentum. Total newspaper spending among the Retailers claimed 16 places among AD AGE's Second 100 leading national advertisers ranking in 1987 and spent 14% of all the media dollars attributed to the group. Second 100 companies also claimed 11.2% of all U.S. measured media in 1987, up from 10.8% in 1986. Network and spot TV in this report accounted for 58.4% of total media. A complete ranking is shown on Page S-2.

Dick Cavett speaks for Hormel in its campaign for new product Top Shelf, nonfrozen entrees that go from "top shelf" to microwave and cook in two minutes.

These cruisers in Lee jeans are touring in VF Corp. ads as part of VF's on-going TV and "laid back" b&w print effort to upstage Levi Strauss. Both hold a 25% share, with Levi Strauss powered by its 501 Blues line for men, and VF by its Lee jeans for women.

In Dewar's ads, bemused Chef Jeremiah Tower liked his with soda. Guinness PLC liked it even more, consuming the brand with the rest of Schenley Industries in a buyout.

New products tool B&D sales

Black & Decker Corp. is pegging its continued growth on new product development. In 1985, the company drew 5% of total sales from new products (three years old or less). That total climbed to 15% in 1987 and is targeted for 35% in the next several years. A big part of that growth has come from transforming products gained in the 1985 purchase of General Electric's small appliance business into the B&D brand.

Domino's outruns competition

Domino's Pizza, the nation's top pizza deliverer, continued its fast growth in 1987 geared to outlet expansion and speed. It added 674 stores ending the year with 4,279 units, and took $3 off the pizza price if delivery took more than 30 minutes. It seldom did: average delivery time at year-end 1987 was 23.09 minutes.

Wall Street Calls Him A Giant.

We Call Him A Subscriber.

Influential: 17,500 are authors, 16,100 hold doctorates, 3,200 are chairmen, presidents or CEOs, a long list of media members.
Very Rich: average household net worth, $455,000, including 6,100 millionaire households. It's just a matter of semantics. We call them subscribers. You call them prime targets. And the first step to calling them yours is a call to Glen Fortinberry, Jr., 1-800/624-2367, ext. 6254.

Winery energizes Sun Country

The nation's third largest winery with a 5.2% share of market, Canandaigua received FDA approval to use NutraSweet in its product, and is expected to be among the first to launch a low calorie cooler. Meanwhile in fiscal 1988, Canandaigua's Sun Country line got a malt-based cooler, was repackaged in sleeker bottles and became a clear product free of pulp in keeping with market tastes.

Now, while everyone else is sending mail that looks mass-produced, you can send mass-produced mail that looks personal, gets opened ... and gets read.

Introducing Opti-Scan: A breakthrough production technology that lets you personalize multiple direct mail package elements and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope.

See for yourself . . .
Better-quality multiple personalized direct mail package elements inside a conventional closed-face personalized envelope affordably and in large volume.

It gives you the look and feel of an individually typewritten letter.

Opti-Scan uses advanced imaging technology to personalize multiple package elements, and then goes one step farther: It uses state-of-the-art lasers to optically read and match your personalized mailing components and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope. The result: a package that looks and feels as though it has been typed by your secretary.

It lets you meet your volume requirements—from as little as 10,000 to over 1,000,000 pieces per day.

Throw away the limitations of the past. You'll no longer have to settle for either a lower-quality product or a smaller-quantity mailing, because Opti-Scan provides both: the absolute highest quality, at production volumes that can meet virtually every direct marketer's need.

It's fast and it's accurate.

Opti-Scan personalizes, matches and inserts your package elements at a rate that is up to 10 times faster than any other technology in its category. And its advanced optical reader is far more accurate than the hand-match and semi-automated matching technologies previously available.

It's the single most affordable way to personalize multiple direct mail package components and insert them into a conventional closed-face outer envelope.

Here at last is an affordable way to create truly personal-looking direct mail that can break through today's mailbox clutter. And it is efficient to use no matter how small or large your mailing may be. That means flexibility to creatively do what you need to do to get your mailings opened and read in today's competitive environment.

It's available only from LaSalle.

LaSalle has been serving the production and lettershop needs of the country's leading direct marketers for more than 40 years, providing responsive, personal service at an affordable price.

Hanson, king of brand spinning

Hanson PLC, the U.K. holding company, is akin to a lazy Susan that rotates condiments from one corporate diner to another. Its advertising as a result constantly shifts in weight from one product to the next as they pass through the company. The three product lines receiving the most advertising in 1986, for example —Glidden paints, Durkee foods and Lea & Perrins sauces—no longer are part of Hanson in 1988. Still advertised are Ball Park Franks, West Virginia Baked Ham, Daisy airguns, Ertl toys, Endicott Johnson shoes, Farberware cookery, Jacuzzi whirlpool baths, PGA gold clubs, and Smith Corona typewriters.

Industrial product marketers can't be cogs...

They have to be wheels...with the ability to analyze, plan and implement marketing strategies that can help their companies turn a profit. Even if you're new to product marketing management, you must be a productive leader. What to do? Don't wait! Get professional hands-on training at the American Management Association.

Since 1924, AMA has offered more sales/marketing programs... to more executives...than any organization anywhere. What better place to get the kinks out of your job knowledge and take your career further along—without fear of falling on your face. Come out of your office for just a few days...come back energized, with more ideas and valuable contacts.

AMA course leaders keep the ball rolling. They come from the field. They know what you need and they deliver. It's that simple, whether you want a strong handle on industrial product management or industrial marketing research.

AMA's quality is guaranteed 100%. You risk nothing. If you have paid your fee in advance and are not satisfied with the course, you can ask for—and get—credit toward another course of comparable length or a full refund. Period.

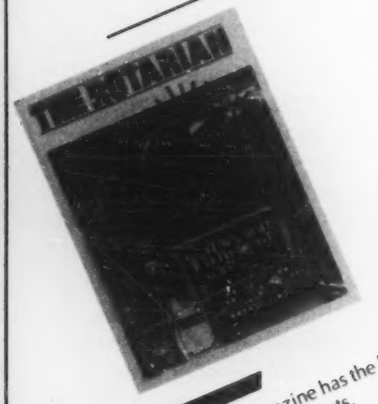
Symbol of Quality

Tradition of Excellence



THE ROTARIAN magazine has the best audience you can recommend to your clients.

What THE ROTARIAN has in common with the major business, travel, and newsweeklies is its reach to affluent business and professional leaders — 500,000 of them.

What is uncommon is the lack of duplication of subscribers and the cost effectiveness.

Loyalty, involvement, and dedication to Rotary guarantees readership. ROTARIANS read THE ROTARIAN . . . THE ROTARIAN is their magazine. And it fills a niche in your advertising plans.

For business, travel, and consumer product advertising details and our Erdos and Morgan study, contact our Advertising Department.

Primerica calls on the 'Duke'

Primerica Corp. became the new name for American Can Co. midway through 1987 and signaled more than just a name change—it reflected the company's new focus on financial services and specialty retailing. Primerica during the year acquired Smith Barney to add to its other operations, including Massachusetts Indemnity and Life Insurance Co., Musicland, Fingerhut Cos. direct mail house, and Michigan Bulb Co. A $3.5 million ad campaign alerted the business community to its new composition, riding on Marion Michael Morrison as an example of a successful moniker switch. Mr. Morrison rode into Hollywood as John Wayne.

Thompson eschews public life

A management buyout led by chairman S. Daniel Abraham will take Thompson Medical Co. private by the end of 1988. During 1988, the company expanded its Slim-Fast meal replacement line and introduced the first campaign in 20 years for its oldest product, Slim-Mint appetite suppressant gum. The campaign took Slim-Mint from subsistence support to a $6 million network TV largess.

Wellcome pares AZT costs

Wellcome PLC's Retrovir (AZT), an AIDS palliative, brought it $70.4 million in six-month sales ended Feb. 27, 1988, but pressure to cut the price led Wellcome to drop the wholesale price for a year's supply by 20%, from $8,000 to $6,500.

WANTED:
National Advertisers

The Bottom Line

That's all that counts in advertising. For advertisers. For their agencies.

That's why we're so pleased, for example, with the bottom line results from direct response advertising in Youth Beat — the fastest growing Sunday supplement in America.

Results that keep going up with our circulation: 3,344,346...7,639,386... 10,011,797 — close to 14,000,000 by October 1, 1989.

Results that have already proved out to more than half a million dollars in direct cash sales from our test circulation of 2.7 million alone. Sales that project to nearly thirty-three million dollars at 14,000,000 circulation.

Sales of everything from stereos, cameras and bicycles — to costume jewelry, computers and VCRs. From food, candy and soft drinks — to cassettes, clothes, cosmetics — you name it.

And when you consider our audience, why not?

Sixty-three percent between 18 and 34. Thirty-six percent married. Seventy-two percent employed. Average family income $32,000. More than 50 billion dollars of spendable income — plus direct influence on an additional $80 billion dollars of purchasing power. These are the people who read Youth Beat. Warm, loyal and responsive to both Youth Beat advertising and Youth Beat editorial alike.

A cover story on missing children, for example, generated more than 500 letters and phone calls to "Child Find". Leads that led directly to locating 44 of the missing youngsters!

But what about rates?

That's the best part. Still only $5 per thousand. Less than half that of our major magazine competitors. And that rate is guaranteed through December 31, 1989 for Charter Advertisers — provided there is a minimum space commitment equivalent to 6 pages and the first insertion is run by April 2, 1989.

For more information, rate card, or reservations, simply call, write — or, better still, have one of our reps stop by.

Second 100 dropped 3.5% to $292 million in 1987.

Trans World Airlines, No. 115, and Pan Am Corp., No. 155, were the Nos. 1 and 2 spenders, respectively, in newspapers, but that belied the fact that airline spending, over-all, dropped 19.8% in newspapers as they cooled their heavy fare discounting wars. Telephone and retail categories, two of the top five spenders in newspapers, dropped by 11.3% and 42%, respectively. The only gains from the top five newspaper categories came from entertainment and automotive.

The biggest ad increase for the Second 100 among the top five measured media in this report came from spot radio, up 19.7% to $204 million. The leading category in the medium, retailing, rose 32.7% to $48.1 million, and the top spender was discounter Melville Corp., No. 169.

Magazines rose to $652 million, a 9.2% increase that was fueled by a 24% increase by the electronics/computers & appliances category, paced by No. 108 Sony Corp.'s $31.9 million expenditures. Sony was the top magazine spender among the Second 100.

Network TV grew to $1.02 billion, up 9.2%, receiving its biggest boost from its No. 1-spending Second 100 category, credit cards/financial. The category totalled $124.5 million in network TV, up 22.5%. However, that tally was offset by net TV's No. 2 category, pharmaceuticals, which dropped 8.7% to $124 million. Retail grew by 9% in network TV to $98 million, and toiletries by 28.4% to $91.7 million. Most of the toiletries' expenditures came from No. 118 Mennen Co., network TV's top spender at $43 million.

Spot TV attracted its biggest expenditure from retail, up 11.3% to $299.8 million out of spot's $1.1 billion total, a 6.3% increase. Restaurants followed with $135 million, up 16.2%. Imasco, owner of Hardee's restaurants, led all spot TV advertisers with $43.3 million. Retailers No. 113 Dayton Hudson Corp., and No. 106 Wal-Mart Stores added expenditures of $36.3 million and $30.7 million, respectively, to rank among spot TV's top five.

Spot TV as usual got an infusion of new ad dollars from new product introductions in regional markets. New product introductions advanced 27% in 1987 to 10,182 on a national basis, according to Gorman Publishing Co.'s Gorman's New Product News, which identified microwaveables and shelf-stable food products as major contributors to volume growth.

Borrowing a page from Gorman's analysis, Geo. A. Hormel & Co., No. 167, introduced Top Shelf, a line of shelf-stable entrees, and New Traditions meats and sandwiches—both product lines being part of Hormel's plan to offer ad-driven "value-added" food lines. Greyhound Corp., No. 163, with Dial Corp. as its major business following its Greyhound bus divestiture in 1986, introduced Lunch Bucket microwave entrees and soups, and expects national penetration by 1989.

Kimberly-Clark Corp., No. 143, enjoying a jump in its market share for Huggies—from 24% share in mid-1986 to 34% in 1987—developed through 1987 its new Snuggems Ultra economy-priced superabsorbent diaper. The line, introduced last February in the Southeast, replaces K-C's own Kleenex Super Dry diapers, a value-priced, non-superabsorbent diaper sold mainly in the South. This is the first diaper since 1985 to be introduced by either K-C or Procter & Gamble with a new brand name and separate advertising.

Guinness, known for its stout, introduced Guinness Gold, a golden lager, in markets from Boston to Northern Virginia. It is the first line extension under the Guinness name in 229 years. Lagers hold some 95% of the U.S. beer market.

Unusual tie-ins and marketing twists during the year included a home-delivered $1-to-$5 dollar-off coupon program from No. 149 Mattel Inc., a practice more in keeping with food marketers than toy companies. Indeed, Mattel's new president came from General Foods Corp.

Imasco gambled on the durability of the California Raisins Claymation performers and used them to promote breakfast items at Hardee's. It worked; Hardee's sales increased about 20% overall and the fast-food chain replaced Wendy's International as No. 3 in total sales. #

Notes to the advertiser ranking

The national advertisers in Ad Age's 4th annual Leading National Advertisers issue for companies ranked 101-200, are selected on the basis of measured ad spending only.

Unmeasured ad estimates then are applied to the leading 200 advertisers to determine rankings. Ad Age published its directory of the top 100 leading national advertisers Sept. 28, 1988. Ad expenditures are for U.S. only and reflect calendar years 1987 and 1986.

BAR/LNA reports supplies the bulk of measured media information. Magazine and newspaper supplements are supplied to LNA by Publishers Information Bureau (PIB). Outdoor is supplied to LNA by Outdoor Advertising Assn. of America and Institute of Outdoor Advertisers. Network TV, spot TV, network radio and cable TV networks are supplied by Broadcast Advertisers Reports. BAR/LNA's seven-media service also supplies brand and category spending by media. Seven-media totals quoted in profiles throughout this issue include only media listed in the preceding paragraph.

BAR is monitoring ad expenditures on syndicated TV separately from network TV and spot TV buys. These ads are bought nationally with the show, much like network TV buys. This spending is not included in measured media in this issue. Other monitored media include newspaper from Media Records, business publications from MMS/Rome Reports, farm publications from AGRICOM and spot radio from Radio Expenditures Reports.

PIB monitors 138 consumer magazines and the three publications it defines as newspaper supplements: New York Magazine, Parade, and USA Weekend. BAR monitors ABC, NBC and CBS TV networks; 345 TV stations in 75 top markets with continuous monitoring in the 16 top markets; CBN, CNN, ESPN, MTV, USA and WTBS cable TV networks continuously, and 17 radio networks including seven ABC networks, two CBS networks, three NBC networks, two United Stations networks and the Mutual, Satellite Music and Transtar radio networks.

O.A.A.A. and I.O.A. measure gross sales from more than 200 national poster and paint advertising plants in markets of over 100,000 population. Rome Reports monitors 567 business and trade publications. Media Records tracks 210 daily and Sunday newspapers.

Some measured media expenditures are restated to reflect corporate structure as of Aug. 7, 1988. Companies acquired prior to that date are included in the new parent's ad spending for full calendar 1987 and 1986 totals. Units spun off before that date are subtracted unless otherwise noted.

Measured-media services vary in the way they track ad spending. For example, MMS/Rome Reports tracks ad spending by division, rather than parent total. Every effort has been made to give full parent company ad expenditures wherever possible.

Unmeasured advertising figures are estimates and include direct mail, promotion, co-op and couponing to name a few. Local newspaper advertising is not included, but free-standing inserts distributed nationally are considered part of unmeasured. Ad Age beat reporters and corporate sources assist in providing this total.

Sales and earnings figures are taken from public documents. Where private companies will not divulge this information, an estimate or an "NA" is used. Foreign currency conversion rates are stated in notes in the profiles.

In the boxes accompanying each profile, sales credited to U.K.-based companies is their turnover and net income their trading profit attributable to ordinary shareholders.

Networks battle over bowl games

By WAYNE WALLEY

Now that major college football bowl game invitations are officially out, the real contest can begin—between advertisers and the TV networks.

ABC, CBS and NBC are all seeking hefty unit price increases over last season despite a marked decline in individual game ratings and chances of further viewer erosion. Seven bowl games—a record—dominate the Big 3 network schedule on Jan. 2.

But audience dilution and underdelivery could mean possible network make-goods. Average ratings for the seven games last season—Hall of Fame (played in December 1987), Citrus, Cotton, Rose, Fiesta, Sugar and Orange (all played Jan. 1)—dropped 14% from the previous year.

The networks hope to guard against losses this time by asking for average increases of as much as 30% per 30-second spot on the seven games.

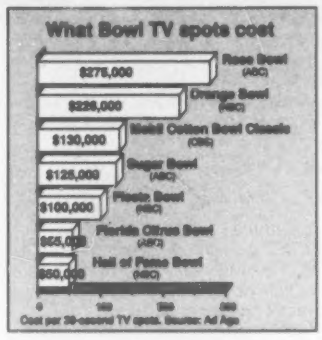
CBS is asking $130,000 for the Mobil Cotton Bowl Classic, double the 1988 rates. ABC wants $55,000 for the Florida Citrus Bowl, up 27.9%; $275,000 for the Rose Bowl, 21.1% more than on NBC in 1988; and $125,000 for the Sugar Bowl, two-thirds more than last season because of its shift from afternoon to a prime-time slot.

NBC's asking price is $50,000 for the Hall of Fame Bowl; $100,000 for the Fiesta, a 33% increase but a marked bargain compared with $227,000 charged for the Rose Bowl in the same time slot last season; and $226,000 for the Orange Bowl, up 2.4%.

Both ABC and NBC are also selling "buy the day" exclusive packages, which NBC successfully sold to Apple Computer last season.

For $4 million, Apple became the only computer advertiser in the Fiesta, Rose and Orange bowls with 22 30-second slots used throughout the day.

But advertisers and agency executives have yet to show interest in such a deal. In fact, most media buyers are predicting a ratings drop because of the extra New Year's Day game this season—the Hall of Fame Bowl.



The ratings results this season could necessitate a change in bowl game economics. If ratings plummet or sales don't materialize at these prices, chances are all three networks would try to renegotiate license fee packages or force reluctant bowl committees to accept corporate sponsorships to keep network contracts.

The Cotton Bowl, reportedly at CBS' request, signed Mobil Oil Corp. to a seven-year sponsorship deal in August that includes a commitment by Mobil to buy time during the telecast.

The Orange Bowl has been shopping for a sponsor but has yet to sign a deal. The Fiesta Bowl has been sponsored by Sunkist since 1987 and USF&G Insurance attached itself to the Sugar Bowl last season.

NBC, in fact, gave up the Rose Bowl this season because it had been losing money on the telecast due to an estimated $9 million network rights fee. The network reportedly wanted the Rose Bowl to sign a corporate sponsor to defray some of its costs, but Rose Bowl officials refused and that set the stage for the move to ABC.

With a void left by the departure of the Rose Bowl, NBC played hardball with the Fiesta Bowl, which originally balked at and then accepted the head-to-head competition with the oldest of the bowl games.

But should Notre Dame and West Virginia remain undefeated, creating a "national championship" Sunkist Fiesta Bowl, NBC will shift the game to 8 p.m. (ET) on Jan. 3. Either way, Fiesta Bowl officials expect the game to show a profit for NBC while gaining national exposure for the Fiesta Bowl parade.#

Gridiron to get dose of 'glasnost'

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Glasnost, the Soviet Union's new policy of "openness," is moving to the gridiron and looking for corporate sponsors.

When the University of Illinois and University of Southern California meet next Sept. 2 in the first U.S. college football game ever played in the Soviet Union, the game may have a global sponsor.

Raycom, the sports marketing company that plans to televise the game around the world, is looking for a marketer with $2.5 million to spend on title rights to the Glasnost Bowl.

Plans for the game were unveiled here last week by Raycom and ABC Sports executives.

ABC will get an undisclosed fee from Raycom to televise the game live. Raycom plans to market the game and will keep ad revenues, said Dee Ray, president of the Charlotte, N.C.-based company.

Although no sponsors have been signed yet for the 3½-hour broadcast, Raycom anticipates little problem selling its 63 30-second units for the contest, which will start at noon (ET)—that's 8 p.m. in Moscow.

Ad rates aren't set yet, said Ray Warren, Raycom senior VP-sales and marketing. He expects rates to be higher than for regular Saturday afternoon games but below those of major college bowl games.

Mr. Warren, until recently an executive at ABC Sports, said Raycom also wants advertisers for half-game or full-game sponsorships.

"We'll try to give every product category an opportunity at an exclusive deal," he said.

While the list of advertisers is likely to include the soft-drink and automobile marketers that usually gravitate to TV sports, Raycom expects a greater proportion of consumer products marketers.

Ms. Ray said consumer product advertisers might want to get product and name exposure in the Soviet Union, where economic cooperation with the U.S. is growing rapidly.

The Glasnost Bowl will be televised throughout the Soviet Union, Ms. Ray said, using the ABC feed complete with commercials broadcast in the U.S. for products unknown and for the most part unavailable to the Soviet audience.

ABC expects the Illinois-USC clash to be the first in a series of games in Moscow and perhaps later expanding to other Soviet cities, Raycom said.#

Hanes gets bolder in underwear ads

sues as part of the $15 million campaign.

Hanes claims a 25% share of the total men's underwear market, representing growth of 17% in its white cotton share and a 28% increase in its fashion share during the past two years.

Second only to Fruit of the Loom's 33% share, Hanes is trailed by Jockey International at a distant third with a 6% share and BVD, a division of Fruit of the Loom, with a 4% share.

With the new campaign, Hanes has retired its tough-talking "Hanes Inspector 12" theme best known for the line, "They don't say Hanes until I say Hanes."

The "Inspector 12" effort was created by Leber Katz Partners, New York, in 1982. That campaign wasn't phased out because it was ineffective. In fact, said Hanes Men's Underwear President Barry Boyd, "Our unit share for the year ending this past September was up over 2 points to 24%."

"Our business had continued to grow, but we wanted to upgrade our image and reach a younger consumer than we did with Inspector 12, who appealed more to the 40-plus segment," said Collett Thach, senior product manager.

That younger consumer is also the one who'd be more inclined to wear fashion underwear which, at 8% a year growth, is outpacing men's white cotton briefs, with growth of 5%, and boxer shorts, with sales stable to slightly declining, Mr. Thach said.#

Richard Darman, as director of the Office of Management & Budget under George Bush, may hold in his hand the future of advertising's tax deductibility.

New OMB director's stand on deductibility worries ad industry

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Ad industry leaders are concerned that Richard Darman, President-elect George Bush's choice to head the powerful Office of Management & Budget, is a proponent of altering the tax deductibility of advertising expenditures.

Mr. Darman, considered a political pragmatist, was named budget director early last week.

The notion of reducing or altering advertising's tax status—now fully deductible as a cost of doing business—first arose at the Department of Treasury during tax-reform negotiations in early 1986. Mr. Darman was former Treasury Secretary James Baker's deputy secretary at the time.

The proposal initially was to reduce deductibility, perhaps to 80%. Later it was proposed that advertising costs be 80% deductible in the first year, with the balance deductible over the next four years.

Leaders of the advertising, broadcasting and publishing industries successfully defused that tax bomb, but it has continued to tick.

With President-elect Bush under pressure to cut the deficit, deductibility of ad spending is likely to be a major issue

Burger King eyeing FCB

Lavely link could help agency

By SCOTT HUME

Foote, Cone & Belding is the leading contender to succeed N W Ayer on Burger King Corp.'s $200 million account should an agency change occur, sources say.

Both Burger King and FCB last week denied rumors that the Chicago agency already is at work on creative assignments and that it will present new creative strategies to the chain in early January.

"Foote, Cone & Belding has been in contact with us, but we have not singled out any agency at this time," a Burger King spokeswoman said last week.

The chain earlier said it was "looking at the option of another agency developing our new creative" (AA, Nov. 21).

Said to be working in FCB's favor is its longstanding relationship with Anthony Lavely, named Burger King exec VP-marketing earlier this year.

Mr. Lavely previously worked at Kitchens of Sara Lee and Jerrico (Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes). FCB handled Long John Silver's until earlier this year; Mr. Lavely left the company in 1986.

Insiders say FCB certainly has had more detailed discussions with Burger King than any other agency, but apparently no change in agency assignment will be made until the question of who will own parent Pillsbury Co. is resolved. Executives at New York-

CBS puts premium on its sports :15s

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—CBS-TV is starting to charge a premium for stand-alone 15-second commercials on all sports programs.

The move adds fuel to the fire that's starting to rage over rising prices for the shorter ad units.

The increasing demand for :15s and the resulting clutter, pricing and product protection problems have been called the "monster issue" looming for networks and advertisers (AA, Aug. 29).

CBS said last week it's boosting prices on the shorter commercial units—which have been set at half the cost of a standard 30-second unit—because it had trouble "matching," or finding partners, for advertisers who want :15s.

The amount of each premium will depend on demand.

CBS began experimenting with the plan two weeks ago for college and professional basketball, but it's now spreading to all sports programming, such as National Football League games, college football and golf's U.S. Open and Masters Tournament.

CBS tries to find appropriate 15-second "matches"—or another 15-second spot to fill out the standard 30-second unit—to avoid a "gap" between the end of one spot

JWT quits Pan Am review

NEW YORK—J. Walter Thompson USA pulled out of Pan American World Airways' $55 million review for its main airline account because of concerns over client conflicts, a JWT spokeswoman said. JWT handles Canada's WardAir, Italy's Alitalia and Mexico's Mexicana Airlines accounts, which on certain routes compete with Pan Am's international service. That leaves D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Della Femina, McNamee WCRS; and Ogilvy & Mather as remaining competitors (AA, Oct. 31). Wells, Rich, Greene previously handled. A separate competition is under way for Pan Am's $10 million Northeast shuttle account, which JWT isn't expected to join.

Exiting Omnicom?

Buyouts hinted for Ingalls, Waring

By GARY LEVIN and ALAN RADDING

Ingalls, Quinn & Johnson, Boston's second-largest agency, may be close to a leveraged buyout from its parent, Omnicom Group.

Another unconfirmed report late last week indicated a leveraged buyout for Waring & LaRosa, New York, also may be in the works. Both Waring and Ingalls are part of Omnicom's Diversified Agency Services group.

Reports circulated last week that a buyout for Ingalls is being engineered by Richard C. "Bink" Garrison, the agency's president; Bruce L. Kelley, exec VP-director of account management; and Harvey Gabor, exec VP-executive creative director.

Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, Boston's No. 3 agency, also was rumored to have attempted an acquisition of Ingalls, but those talks apparently have ended.

Ingalls billed $135 million last year.

A source at another agency said the rumors were fueled when a handful of Ingalls employees rejected job offers elsewhere because they'd been assured they would be part of an Ingalls buyout. The Boston Globe mentioned the possible leveraged buyout in an article last week.

Mr. Garrison would neither confirm nor deny the rumors under orders from Omnicom President-CEO Allen Rosenshine, who couldn't be reached for comment. "There's nothing I can comment or speculate about," he said.

An Omnicom spokesman declined comment, saying only that "we've not talked about it here."

A well-placed source, while acknowledging Omnicom's interest in a sale, said no deal was imminent.

Earlier this year, Mr. Rosenshine hinted at the possibility of selling part or all of Ingalls, Waring and Dallas-based Tracy-Locke, all part of Omnicom's diversified group.

Holiday shoppers Diane Davis (l.) of Hinsdale, Ill., and her sister-in-law, Kristen Davis of St. Charles, search for "something unique at good prices" at Bloomingdale's in Chicago.

Shoppers give big kickoff to holiday sales

An Advertising Age roundup

On the biggest shopping day of the year—the day after Thanksgiving—consumers loosened their purse strings and by midday had gone on a binge.

"This is a very robust holiday season," said Fred Marx, president of Marx & Co., a Bloomfield Hills, Mich., retail consulting company. He based his view on pre-Thanksgiving sales levels and consumer buying up to midday Friday.

That day is a key barometer for holiday sales because a strong fourth-quarter can account for as much as 44% of total year sales.

In Houston, Robert Sakowitz, president-ceo of Sakowitz Inc., was buoyant. "We had people waiting outside the door" at opening, he said. "I think it's going to be a very good Christmas."

In Hayward, Calif., lines also formed outside Mervyn's before opening and sales were brisk all morning. "In many markets, we're trending ahead of last year," a spokeswoman said.

In New York City, where the weather was sunny and cool, major retailers reported sales Nov. 25 were exceeding their expectations.

"So far, it's very, very strong," said Anthony Verizis, exec VP-marketing and communications, Abraham & Straus. "The stores are jammed."

At Bloomingdale's, stores were packed with customers. "Sales look very strong . . . above expectations," said Julian Taub, senior VP.

Ties to Chrysler pay as Ross Roy bags Alfa Romeo

By PATRICIA STRNAD

Ross Roy Inc. was rewarded last week for its persistence in seeking a car account from client Chrysler Motors—it got the $10 million Alfa Romeo account.

Alfa Romeo selected Ross Roy to handle national advertising for its import line after a five-month review.

The Bloomfield Hills, Mich., agency got its big break in mid-October when Chrysler and Alfa's Italian parent, Fiat Auto, formed a joint distribution company, headed by Darrell Davis, formerly general sales manager for Chrysler (AA, Oct. 17).

Mr. Davis said Ross Roy's automotive experience—it already handles Chrysler merchandising—was a key factor in the decision. "Because of our limited budget, I felt merchandising would play an important part in whatever we did," he added.

Other finalists for the account were Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago; Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York; and Biederman & Co., New York. An Alfa official said at least 100 agencies expressed interest.

Ross Roy last year lobbied hard for the $100 million-plus Jeep/Eagle business after Chrysler acquired the lines as part of American Motors Corp. But Chrysler stuck with AMC's agency, William Esty Co., now Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Southfield, Mich.

Politicians are ad-recall winners

By SCOTT HUME

George Bush, Michael Dukakis and the nation's other candidates for political office were the best-recalled advertised products last month.

Fittingly, at a time when the quality and effectiveness of the two major presidential candidates' TV advertising sometimes seemed the campaign's most discussed issue, politicians were the most effective advertisers.

When 1,000 adults were asked last month which advertisement they first recalled having heard, seen or read, political ads easily outdistanced the field.

That field included such high-visibility products as (Nos. 2 through 10 in descending order): McDonald's, Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser/Bud Light, Miller, Pepsi-Cola, Coca-Cola, Chevrolet, California raisins, Ford and Stroh.

Like the latest hit on the music charts, political ads have steadily moved up toward the top spot. They ranked No. 9 in August before inching up to No. 6 in September and then taking the crown in October.

Political advertising topped the recall lists for all demographic groups but had higher recall among men (57% of those who named political ads first) than women, and highest among respondents ages 25 to 34 and among those with household incomes above $60,000.

The strong response garnered by political advertising kept McDonald's from repeating for a second consecutive month as the advertiser with the best overall top-of-mind awareness.

But McDonald's did pass a milestone. When the 1,000 adults were asked which fast-food advertising they first recalled having seen, heard or read, McDonald's was named by 51.7% of the respondents.

No single advertiser ever before has received the first mentions of more than half the respondents, though McDonald's recall score traditionally has hovered around that mark. In September, for example, it got 48.4% of first mentions.

What likely put Big Mac over the top in October was the heavily advertised one-two punch of its "When the U.S. Wins, You Win" Summer Olympics game promotion followed by the return of its "Mac Tonight" character.

Burger King last month launched the largest national promotion in the hamburger chain's history—the "Triple Jump Checkers" game promotion—and hardly anyone noticed.

Despite heavy network and spot TV support, awareness of Burger King's advertising actually fell to 12.6% of first mentions in October, down from 13.7% in September.

Wendy's was third last month with 8.8% of first mentions.

AdWatch is a joint project of Advertising Age and the Gallup Organization. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that comes to mind first, both overall and in specific product categories.

Last month, 1,000 people were polled by phone. The survey has a margin of error of 3.1%.

Among other significant changes in the October survey:

- Just as the computer category started to tighten up, Apple has surged again.

In September, recall of IBM's advertising jumped 6.2 points to 28.8% of first mentions, putting it only a half point behind Apple's 29.3% share. But Apple's advertising rebounded last month, rising 4.8 points to a 34.1% top-of-mind recall rating; IBM was down to 26.7%. Radio Shack was third with 2.9%.

- Ford lost most of its previous month's gain in the cars and trucks category, falling 3.5 points to 22.8% of first mentions. Chevrolet was unchanged at 22% in second place; Toyota was third with a 6.4% share.
- Goodyear's advertising continued the impressive increase in awareness it has registered in the tire category since the "Nobody fits you like Goodyear" campaign began in August.

That month, its share of first mentions rose more than 5 points to 27.5%. In September, its share moved up to 29.3%, and last month it hit 31.2%.

This was the first time any one tire marketer's advertising had been named by more than 30% of a monthly sample.

Michelin was second in October, with 16.9% of first mentions; Firestone third with 7.1%.#

Canon zooms in on future growth

Focus changes to consumer desires

By DAVID KILBURN

TOKYO—Canon, the electronics company that built its business exporting high-quality, lower-cost products designed and made in Japan, is in a state of transition.

Protectionism, trade friction and the yen's high value have forced Canon planners to take a hard look at how the company should position itself to maintain growth in the future—especially considering the soon-to-be unified European market and the growing sophistication of consumers worldwide.

Unlike most other Japanese companies, Canon has relied on overseas markets for 70% of its sales, which hit $7.9 billion in 1987. North America and Europe are Canon's two largest world markets, each accounting for around 30% of sales.

While export growth has given Canon an edge in international sophistication, it means the company must deal with trade problems and protectionism to sustain growth.

Should Canon fall prey to the troubles caused by exporting, it cannot fall back on a large domestic market in Japan to survive. Canon's overall business is far smaller than its major domestic competitors'.

Concerned about consumers

Reflecting the company's foundation, Canon still holds technology in high esteem, but must be more open to consumer desires.

"We aim to develop our own unique technologies, which can then form the basis of our products," said Eiji Toyosaki, corporate communications manager. "Product development is handled entirely" by research and development.

However, he admits Canon "must change from being a product-oriented company to a market-oriented one. Until now, we have been concerned more with production and sales than marketing. We will be focusing much more closely on the needs of different consumer groups in each country and less concerned with the traditional production-oriented way of thinking."

This change will call for a complex readjustment in almost every aspect of Canon's activities.

"As marketing is made stronger, there is the risk it will weaken the motivation of the engineers who both pilot the new technologies and develop the new products," Mr. Toyosaki said.

The problems can be overcome, he said. "The engineers are already getting involved in marketing and finding out about the consumer. R&D and marketing were once separate functions but, in the future, they will become increasingly integrated," Mr. Toyosaki said.

A young company by Japanese standards, Canon dates from 1933 when a small group of camera enthusiasts started a laboratory to design and manufacture 35mm cameras matching the quality of the German-made Leica. After two years, it produced its first camera sold at half the price of the Leica, including innovations such as a pop-up viewfinder. In 1937, the laboratory was reorganized and incorporated, creating the company now called Canon.

Canon is picturing itself as consumer oriented. Dentsu handled this Canon EOS camera ad, headlined "Prelude to Life."

Beyond cameras

Today, the product line includes video, business machines, medical equipment, broadcast equipment and semiconductors. Business machines now account for about 75% of sales, with cameras and optical equipment accounting for 18% and 7%, respectively.

So far the company's technological edge has helped it make steady progress. In 1987, it was No. 91 in Fortune's ranking of the biggest industrial corporations outside the U.S., up from No. 98 in 1986 and No. 125 in 1985.

But circumstances are changing, said Noritomo Kobayashi, manager of the international marketing development division.

"This year we have introduced the Global Canon Marketing System," a business plan to enable Canon to relate better to consumer needs across its many markets, he said. For instance, the plan could lead to standardized hardware of products with varied software.

"It is still too early to say that we are making a global marketing strategy; the system is still too new. But, in the future we must have this function, and it will need to be very strong. Without it, the value of our products will be much smaller than their potential," he said.

Although vying with Minolta to be Japan's largest camera marketer, Canon is increasingly being pressured by Nikon, which also has technologically advanced products and a keen sense of consumer needs. Competition in Canon's other business areas—much coming from the same competitors as in the camera market—isn't any easier.

The change in philosophy is clearly demonstrated by the company's plan to replace its current divisional structure.

Philosophy lesson

"At the moment, we have a traditional structure based on three product group divisions—cameras, optical products and business machines. We will see a change from product divisions to more market-oriented groups that will reflect the needs of customers more directly," said Hisashi Tainaka, general manager-international marketing division. The company is considering restructuring to set up home, society, industry and workplace divisions.

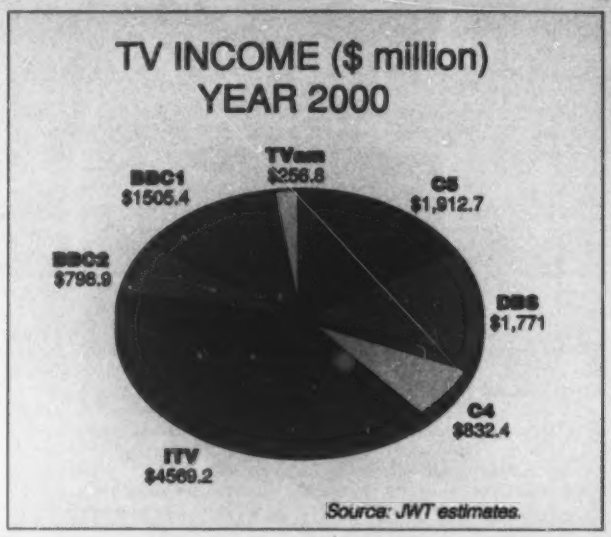
Canon has been manufacturing overseas since 1970, when a camera factory was set up in Taiwan. More recently, as the rising value of the yen has made Japanese-made products increasingly expensive overseas and as trade friction has made export strategies more difficult, the company has opened more facilities in major markets.

The objective, Mr. Toyosaki said, "is to make Canon a company with no national identity and free from trade friction, by setting up autonomous manufacturing subsidiaries and, more recently, R&D facilities, keeping production close to the place of consumption."

Canon's progress overseas is important to its main agencies in Japan. Unlike most Japanese companies, Canon has consistently supported Dentsu and Hakuhodo in their own international moves.

Canon is a key account for Dentsu Corp. of America in New York and for Hakuhodo's office in Amsterdam, which coordinates much of Canon's advertising in Europe.

In 1987 the company spent $311 million on media advertising, production and point of purchase. Spending is divided evenly among Europe, North America and Japan.#



U.K. advertisers applaud attempt at deregulation

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—Though advertisers eager to curb the rising costs of TV ad time are welcoming the U.K. government's radical proposals to deregulate TV and radio, some broadcasters are worried.

A long-awaited 45-page government report, "Broadcasting in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality," published earlier this month, is the basis for legislation to be introduced and likely to be approved by Parliament next year. It would change completely the system of two non-commercial BBC channels and two advertising-supported channels.

Ken Miles, director of the Incorporated Society of British Advertisers, said advertisers are pleased about plans to start a fifth national TV channel in 1991, with the possibility of a sixth to follow.

However, he said advertisers are "not very happy" about the proposal to sell off the 16 regional franchises of the existing commercial network ITV when the franchises expire in 1992 or about plans to replace the current tax on the ITV companies' profits with a new tax on ad revenue.

"We think that to add an advertising levy on top of paying a lump sum on [buying] a franchise may put up the cost to advertisers and affect [franchisees'] ability to make good programs," he said.

The government report discusses the BBC; the existing two commercial channels ITV (to be renamed Channel 3) and Channel 4; the fifth and sixth channels; cable TV; and the new direct broadcast by satellite channels that will begin in the U.K. in February.

TVS Entertainment ads warn that deregulation could lower program standards.

If Parliament passes the report's recommendations, all channels except the BBC can seek revenue from advertising, sponsorship and subscription or pay TV. Mr. Miles said barter syndication, now banned in the U.K., is likely to be allowed; however, it is not mentioned specifically in the report. And even the BBC will be encouraged to explore sponsorship and pay TV for special events to reduce dependence on annual TV license fees.

"We hope [ad] rates will stabilize with the extra supply," Mr. Miles said.

U.K. advertisers want relief from prices that have been rising by 15% a year as demand continues to outstrip the seven minutes per hour of commercials available on ITV and Channel 4.

"Advertisers are looking for an increase in commercial impacts," said Stewart Butterfield, European media director, McCann-Erickson.

In a new J. Walter Thompson Co. report on TV in the year 2000, JWT TV Controller Tim Drysdale predicted that by the end of the 1990s, commercial audiences will increase by 20% as new channels win viewers from the BBC and increase the number of viewing hours.

The existing ITV companies that stand to lose their franchises oppose the sweeping changes. TVS Entertainment, the ITV company covering southern England, has been running page newspaper ads of a sultry woman doing a striptease with the warning that TV deregulation in Italy led to declining program standards. TVS Chief Executive James Gatward predicted that U.K. TV ad revenues will total $3.2 billion in 1992, a 36.2% increase from 1987. Mr. Gatward said that would be insufficient to fund all the planned new TV channels.#

Rate hikes fall off pace as poor year hits pricing

Moderate increases, some below inflation, mark a year of transition

Media mavens watch Robert J. Coen's forecasts with a mixture of hope and fear. How they respond depends on which side of the bargaining table they are sitting.

Since 1950 Mr. Coen has dauntlessly prognosticated the media's winners and losers. McCann-Erickson's senior VP & director of forecasting casts his eyes upon 1989, picking moderate price increases in every media category despite poor performance in many.

By Robert J. Coen

Although a moderately higher rate of inflation is expected for the U.S. economy, the pace of media price increases is likely to be the same or even more modest than at the start of 1988.

The expectations of extra advertising demand from the elections and the Olympics raised the pricing targets of most media at the start of 1988. But demand fizzled and prices softened as the year unfolded.

The normal post-Olympics slump plus the failure of a turnaround in ad demand should suppress price increase pressures to cover higher postage, paper and labor costs. In 1989, most media hope to raise their prices by 4% to 6%, but most marketers intend to maintain tough buying tactics.

Most of the key marketing categories have continued to emphasize price and promotion tactics over advertising. Signs of surging product categories are not immediately evident. Unless some new unforeseeable ad demand appears within the next few months, media reinflation is not likely to reappear soon.

The present levels of media supply and demand suggest relatively modest rate hikes in 1989.

No medals for network TV

The Olympics added nearly $1 billion to network TV ad revenue. Without the Olympics revenue increases would have been quite small and price increases would have been insignificant except for a few of the most popular prime-time and sports programs.

During non-Olympics months in 1988, network prices were flat in most time periods and the average cost of a 30-second spot actually declined during daytime hours. The loss of interest in daytime units and the proliferation of 15-second spots have significantly shifted the supply-and-demand relationship.

Unit price increases for 1989 will be mixed, with prime time and sports up about 4% or 5% on average. A modest further slide in ratings could mean cost-per-thousand increases of 5% to 6%. Although the decline in the price of the weekday daytime units may be about over, no significant increase in these prices is likely soon.

Increases in the price of all dayparts are expected to average about 3% for the year, with CPMs rising about 4%.

Spot TV supply up, demand down

The shift in the supply-demand pattern for spot TV is quite similar to network TV's. The supply of acceptable inventory has been growing as demand has been slipping.

In 1987 there were clear signs that most key national and local spot category budgets were no longer rising. In 1988 the Olympics and the elections provided only a modest quadrennial boost. In 1989, no significant new-product introductions or competitive budget increases are expected.

The average unit price increases for spot TV will rise only 2% over their 1988 levels. The trend toward audience fragmentation also should persist, meaning most commercial units will deliver slightly smaller audiences. In 1989 the CPM for most spot TV schedules is expected to rise about 3%.

In 1989 the big money will be in the vault, not in media companies' coffers, predicts McCann's Robert J. Coen.

Rates bending, but will they break?

Pressured publishers move to change haggling along strictly dollar terms

By Laurie Werner

Publishers and ad agencies may move the negotiating table into a boxing ring next year. Rate negotiation talks are bound to be no-holds-barred slugfests.

"The supply of magazines is up, and the demand is down," says John Gray, senior VP, director-media planning, J. Walter Thompson USA. "And that is going to put tremendous pressure on publishers."

Every negotiating tool will be called into play to diffuse strictly dollar-related bargaining. "Rate negotiation is a fact of life," however, according to James Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development, Magazine Publishers of America.

It even may be on the rise given publishers' intention to raise rates 6% to 8%. "Postage and paper increases may account for a 5% increase, but that doesn't justify 6% to 8%," Mr. Gray says.

"There's no average discount," he says, but rate cuts usually range from 5% to 10%. The rate may be slashed 50% when a publisher is desperate to fill a page, Mr. Gray says.

"They could turn to other places to cut costs," he says. "Time's recent decision to prune expensive circulation [to stave off a rate increase] is the right thing to do."

While magazines must meet fixed costs, they can trim the size of their book to lower production expenses. Television has less flexibility because cutting corners immediately would be apparent in programming production values, says Art Heller, exec VP, director-media programming and promotion services, Griffin Bacal. "But it's a trade-off, and some magazines are getting to the point where they may compromise editorial quality," which will be their undoing, he says.

Yet they may have no choice but to cut rates in a marketplace where competitors deal off the card. "Several magazines have proved to be immune to negotiating, but whether they will be able to continue that policy is the question," Mr. Heller says.

There are ways to write a rate card with a chisel—not with a pencil and eraser—and still negotiate, he says.

Cross-magazine and cross-media discounts allow rate cuts to be spread more thinly among individual publications. Ideas such as Time Inc.'s Max-Plan, which gives advertisers space credits if they match or exceed the money spent in Time Inc. publications during a year, will be on the rise, Mr. Gray says.

But relatively new discounting twists will take hold. Exclusivity discounts are emerging where publishers offer discounts to advertisers that buy their book but not the competitor.

View from the trenches: Magazines

Time to spruce up those dusty racks

New foes 'leave less for magazines,' forcing a change in reaching buyers

It's gut-check time for magazines. They not only face mounting pressure from other media for consumers' time and media dollars, but advertiser and agency demands for rate bending, merchandising options and prime positioning are at peak levels.

All this happens as the medium posts gains. Figures for the first three quarters of this year show ad revenue up 8.6% to $4.1 billion from the same period last year, and ad pages up 2.8% to 117,546. Magazine Publishers of America President Don Kummerfeld predicts total 1988 revenues will rise 9% to almost $5.9 billion.

But the medium's big picture looks murky. Magazines' share of total ad revenue dropped to 5.3% in 1987 from 6.1% in 1980. Magazines are losing share to cable and conventional TV, says John J. Meskil, exec VP-media and administration at Warwick Advertising.

The problem will continue, "leaving less for magazines," he says. "Growth of cable homes at affordable pricing will cut into magazine revenue at an increasing rate in 1989."

In the following piece, Mr. Meskil suggests magazines will need to bend a bit more to accommodate a more demanding buying audience.

By John J. Meskil

Circulation is becoming a major problem for many magazines. Single-copy newsstand sales peaked in 1980 but have declined by more than 14 million in the last 10 years despite the addition of 150 major titles. Nine of the top 10 leading newsstand magazines have lost circulation in the last two years.

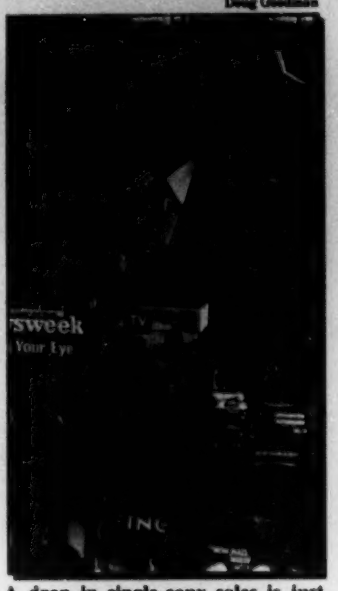
Subscription sales have increased significantly, compensating for the loss in single-copy sales. However, these subscriptions are more expensive to obtain as publications rely increasingly on promotions and incentives to generate readers.

Magazines will face increasing pressure to raise cover/subscription prices to supplant increasing production costs. The average cost of an annual magazine subscription has risen from $18 in 1981 to $23.50 in 1989, about the same cost to install cable. Asked to make a choice, consumers increasingly will subscribe to fewer magazines to afford cable.

But magazines have no other alternative to raising costs to the consumer. Paper costs are increasing 15% annually and second-class postage is up 17%.

Circulation losses will result when magazines find it too expensive to promote to the marginal reader. Circulations of many major magazines, particularly those with more than 1 million circulation, will decline in 1989. For example, recognizing the high cost of attracting and maintaining subscribers, Time elected to cut guaranteed circulation, defraying an ad rate increase.

Doug Goodman



A drop in single-copy sales is just one of publishers' many woes, says Warwick's John Meskil.

The increasing cost of paper, postage and promotion will cause most magazines to hike ad rates 7% to 8% in 1989. For example, McCall's rates will jump 7% and People's 7.8%. Magazines held 1988 rate increases to 3% to 5% and will play catch up next year.

Publishers have to allow room for rate negotiation, but they will hesitate to cut rates in 1989. We are close to the point where rates are cut at the expense of editorial quality, which would sound their death knell.

While rate negotiation will continue in 1989, the term will go out of style. Advertisers and agencies know who will cut rates to get the business, but magazines have gotten better at the art of negotiation and will give the store away only to very big advertisers.

Magazines will emphasize their role as a marketing partner. The terms "added value" and "product specific merchandising" will be in vogue in 1989 as magazines and clients attempt to enhance the value of the medium in moving product.

For example, in Mademoiselle's "Center Stage" shopping-mall program editors showcase the latest fashions and advertisers give away shopping bags reinforcing the tie in between editorial and advertiser. Better Homes & Gardens, Vanity Fair and other magazines have developed ways to tie advertised products to the magazines' retail and consumer influence.

The concept of pooling merchandising dollars from several publications to build a high-impact added value should be advanced. Rather than having advertisers approach single publications and receive a 1% merchandising allowance, all publications involved in the buy can combine efforts to give the advertiser something bigger.

Ad positioning will become a bigger negotiating chip in

"added value" to existing rates rather than discussing discounts, even when the latter is involved. "The 200 advertisers in our Max-Plan have earned millions of dollars of credits, but more important, they've extended their reach in our magazines and their share of market," says Reginald Brack, Jr., president, Time Inc.'s Magazine Group.

Value-added is also the buzzword at Hearst Corp. "It's our responsibility to educate ad agencies that thinking price alone does not serve their clients' needs," says Claeys Bahrenburg, exec VP, group publishing director. Hearst positions its four magazine packages as franchise builders, not just discount options.

"We don't view advertising as just selling ad pages," says Mr. Bahrenburg, "we view it as being an advertiser's and agency's marketing partner." Hearst has worked with Procter & Gamble Co. and Kraft Inc. to create point-of-purchase promotions, using "The value of our franchise to give positive ruboff to their products."

Value-added options are becoming so much a part of the buying process, agencies often view with suspicion publishers who dwell only on discounts. "We've seen companies come in and give too much away," says Leo Scullin, senior VP, director-new electronic and print media, Young & Rubicam. "It immediately makes us suspect of their business situation."

Editorial tie-ins, special sections, special issues and ad positioning will become increasingly important negotiating tools, says Mr. Gray. The importance of each will vary depending on client needs.

"Some need pure tonnage, saturation for the lowest cost, so you go for rate negotiation. Others need unique positions near a certain editorial, so you don't push as hard for price, you go for positioning," he says.

"Positioning is vital to us," Mr. Heller says, adding that front-of-the-book isn't always the criteria. "We look for positioning opposite editorial that will talk to our target."

Promotional tie-ins such as trips and tennis/golf tournaments may not generate a buy, but they can help push reluctant advertisers over the edge. "Next year we'll see proof of publishers' creativity," says Mr. Gray. "Offerings will be limited only by their ability to dream something up."

They will have to dream big, particularly as the trend of advertiser-as-publisher accelerates, says Louis Schultz, exec VP, Lintas:Campbell-Ewald. "I see a lot of advertisers looking at proprietary magazines because it is the closest a magazine can come to direct marketing," he says.

Client General Motors Corp. Chevrolet division's Chevy Outdoors, a quarterly for truck owners, gives the company a targeted forum for its ads and sells space to advertisers such as Coleman Co. and Winnebago Industries.

As for publishers' moves to creatively blunt rate cuts, Mr. Schultz bets that dollars will remain the focus of negotiations. "We're certainly interested in talking about positioning, merchandising and all the bells and whistles. But first the rate has to be right."

POINT OF ATTACK

Climbing costs cause concern

The three Ps of publishing are starting to sour Peter Diamandis' mood. "The biggest issue we will face next year is escalating costs—press, postage, paper," says the ceo of Diamandis Communications.

"It's tough to take all in one year," he says, adding that publishers will face a 10% to 15% increase in paper prices next year. "That's too much. It'll drive marginal guys out of the business. The rest of us will have to fight like hell to keep those costs down," he says.

Mr. Diamandis says publishers will explore alternate delivery systems and group paper purchases at fewer suppliers to realize volume discounts. "There are cheaper means available," he says.

Publishers also must address the continuing decline of single-copy sales. The obvious solution, according to Mr. Diamandis, is to "Create excellent magazines that the public wants to buy."

Constant innovation is the approach used at Whittle Communications, says Chairman Christopher Whittle. "We're in an extremely idea-driven business," he says. Mr. Whittle's big idea this year galvanized the publishing industry, as other publishers viewed as predatory the company's exclusivity agreements with doctors, dentists and others with waiting rooms for its Special Report publications.

But concepts like this meet the primary purposes of serving reader and advertiser, he says. "If you have the right idea, [advertisers] are more than happy to participate."

However, Special Reports cannot grow, Mr. Whittle says. "Where most publishers look to define their growth by extending circulation or increasing ad pages, we can't do either."

This forces the company constantly to come up with new concepts, a situation most publishers rarely face. Whittle Communications will launch eight to 12 new publications next year, which he describes as "a typical year."

"Unlike other publishers, I don't have competitive pressures. I don't have rate pressures. I don't use the post office, so I don't have postal rate pressure. And we don't use much paper," Mr. Whittle says. "Coming up with ideas and recruiting new talent are the challenges we face."

Trouble corralling the grazers

Studies hint at depth of problem, but nets just begin to shake their apathy

By Jim Benson

Network and advertising executives long have feared the day when the TV generation would reach adulthood, bringing with it limited attention spans and itchy remote-control trigger fingers.

The day has arrived, and channel switching, also known as grazing, has become an accepted part of viewing among those in the demographically desirable 18-to-34-year-old age group. Similar to commercial zapping, grazing illustrates viewers' inability to get hooked by a specific TV program.

The issue is whether grazing will put the networks further out to pasture. The implications could be staggering as networks are forced to charge drastically lower rates to reflect transient viewing audiences. Advertisers, meanwhile, would reach fewer and less-involved viewers.

Despite indications the problem may be growing worse, neither advertisers nor network executives are panicking. "I think we've all been ignoring it," says a media buyer for a major company.

Tom Herzberg

Budgets are not being shifted because of grazing, "but there is some concern," says John Sisk, senior VP, director-network negotiating, J. Walter Thompson Co.

"It's hard to generalize because we don't have a lot of data," says Richard Kostyra, exec VP, U.S. director-media services, JWT. He admits that all preliminary evidence indicates channel switching "is a growing problem."

Data on the subject is sketchy, often conflicting. During its brief foray into the market in the 1987-88 TV season, R.D. Percy & Co. put its passive people meter system to work to assess grazing's impact. It found that 13% of viewers switch channels during the course of a program.

Another recent study claimed more than 50% of viewers aged 18 to 34 watch more than one program in a half-hour period and 20% watch three or more. Of the 650 men and women interviewed by Frank N. Magid Associates, 25% of all respondents claimed to change channels to at least one other program during a half-hour time period.

Although David Poltrack, senior VP-planning & research, CBS, has criticized the people meter, he not surprisingly considers the Percy results to be more reliable. The people meter figures he has seen also lead him to suspect that grazing patterns may not be entirely bad for the networks.

He points to the finding that 90% of the people who switch channels fail to return to the program they were watching. That bodes well for the network that winds up with the displaced viewers, he says.

Although show ratings can be provided on a minute-by-minute basis, programming is bought and sold based on total half-hour ratings. Mr. Sisk says ratings and media buys should be measured by the commercial pod. "There has been some talk about advertisers paying the rating at the time of the commercial," he says.

To hold the audience, networks must continue to aim for "more involved programming," Mr. Kostyra says, where viewers schedule programs into their nightly routine. Opinions on whether that entails developing more narrowcast shows or programs that appeal to the mass audience depends on the product being sold.

But Mr. Poltrack says the networks can take some definite steps to break grazing patterns. CBS just began using "attitude" messages at the end of its programs, where voice-overs discuss the remainder of the night's schedule as the program's credits are rolled.

Mr. Sisk says he would like to see more networks put commercials in during the show, and not after the credits. "Viewers race to turn the channel selector once the credits have aired," he says.

But the networks cannot do it alone. Zapping commercials within a show leads to grazing, and advertisers must come up with compelling spots that grab the viewer within the first few seconds, says Lon Bencini, media manager at General Mills.

The proliferation of humorous spots and those using vignettes—15-second and 30-second spots intertwined with news updates or quizzes—reflect advertiser moves to prevent zapping through creative approaches, he says.

Even with increasing entertainment values and unusual pod configurations, advertisers are stifled by network commercial practices. The Big 3 networks have to rethink their strategy of cramming promotional spots, public service announcements and news breaks into the last commercial opening, says Chuck Fruit, VP-corporate media, Anheuser-Busch Cos.

"The viewer doesn't distinguish between those as much as we in the business do," he says. "From now on the network programmers and advertisers are going to have to pay attention not just to the ratings, but to the way the shows are structured in terms of commercial load and other non-program material."

In prime time, advertisers have attempted to mute the effect of commercial zapping by increasing product placements on network shows. But many agency buyers believe the networks will start clamping down on the practice.

Paul Isacsson, exec VP, director-broadcast programming and purchasing at Young & Rubicam, New York, sees the advent of high-definition TV as a possible grazing stopper as the higher quality image might help capture viewers. "There is a lot of technology coming down the line that we can make use of," he says.

While grazing presents difficulties, "It's not the end of the world," Mr. Isacsson says.

Mr. Bencini sees it differently. "It's a big, fuzzy issue," he says. "I don't think too many people have their hands on it."

Another bad year for TV's Goliaths

The big kids on the block are bloodied, but not about to leave town

By Willard G. Hadlock

It's getting easy to pick on network TV. Sure, media's big hitter has seen ad revenues grow 16.5% to $4.7 billion from January to June 1988 compared with the same period last year.

But the big lunk is in big trouble. Cable is nipping at its heels, syndication is nibbling on its toes. Audience fragmentation and ratings declines, zapping and grazing, VCRs and pay-per-view, writers' strikes and less-than-warmly received season premieres: Need we say more?

Willard G. Hadlock, exec VP, media services at Leo Burnett Co., identifies the events that should have made network TV a shadow of its former self, why that shadow still has a lot of substance and how it is attempting to step back into the spotlight.

The network world has never been in such a state of flux as it is now. The change has come quickly; it is a much different TV market than what we faced in the early '80s.

The growth in alternate programming sources—both commercial sources like cable and syndication and non-commercial sources like pay movies and prerecorded tapes—have taken away the networks' sole dominance over TV. Additionally, the advent of the 15-second commercial, the demise of the National Association of Broadcasters code and a switch in TV measurement from diaries and household meters to people meters have changed how network TV is bought and sold.

The networks' share of audience has fallen from the low 90% level not so many years ago to the low 70% and high 60% level today—and it will continue to drop.

This failing network audience will have many repercussions. Advertisers will continue to pay rate increases while the networks suffer a revenue slump. Both buyer and seller lose.

How is this possible? Buyers, at least knowledgeable ones, measure their costs by costs-per-thousand and CPMs rise as audiences decline. The networks' revenues are based on unit costs and they have been unable to get unit price increases. In fact, Broadcast Advertiser Reports says the networks' total revenue has risen only 4% to $8.7 billion over the last three years.

Mary Horlehy

Everybody's a loser next year in buying and selling network TV, says Leo Burnett's Bill Hadlock. Ad rates are up and network revenues are down.

Flattening revenue in a period of rising costs has caused the networks' profit margins to fall from 12% in the late '70s to 6% in the mid-'80s and it is continuing down.

Declining audiences, flattening revenues and lower profits have been major factors in the takeover of the networks by outside corporations. These factors also are causing the networks to search for new areas of revenue.

One of those areas is increased commercial time. In prime time we have gone from six commercial minutes an hour to almost seven. It's likely that the commercial load will now move toward eight minutes an hour—we already have four minutes of ads in some half-hour shows.

Viewers may not like it, and neither will some buyers. But

Crossroads for video crossover

Soon as format settles in, home video set to burst as a powerful medium

By Wayne Walley

The year is 2008. The latest blockbuster surpasses $100 million at the box office. A media buyer smiles. A commercial for an important client already has been placed on the upcoming video release of the hit movie as part of an upfront package deal.

While many see this scenario as a future reality for the home video industry, it may be pure fantasy.

"Alternative" media forms emerge with regularity, but few hold the potential of videocassette advertising. Recent A.C. Nielsen Co. figures show 60% of American TV households have at least one VCR. The Electronic Industries Association estimates prerecorded cassette sales will jump 22% to 135 million units in 1988.

Rented videocassettes represent a potential ad medium of more than $45 million a year, according to Steve Wilson, chairman-ceo of Fairfield Group, a home entertainment consultancy.

However, since Pepsi-Cola Co. boomed through the videocassette commercial barrier by placing a 60-second Diet Pepsi spot on the "Top Gun" tape two years ago, home video has become more of an enigma than a medium.

"Studios and advertisers haven't been sure how to capitalize on video," says Robert Reisenberg, president, Maltese Productions and Maltese Video Partners. "The first thought is to sponsor a video or make a media buy, but people are finding out this is a small part of the equation."

Others see the medium emerging soon. "Videocassette recorders will be at 90% of home penetration in no time flat," says Louis Schultz, exec VP, Lintas:Campbell-Ewald. "Advertisers see the value of that." Advertiser-sponsored prerecorded videocassettes particularly will become "a real serious contender for ad dollars," he says.

Scores of advertisers have sponsored special-interest tapes, complete with commercials, as value-added premiums. Others have opted for cross-promotional campaigns offering consumers a rebate with video and product proof of purchase. For example, Royal Crown Cola purchased 20,000 units of "It's a Wonderful Life" and inserted a 30-second spot for a holiday season proof-of-purchase promotion.

Although Nestle Foods swung a deal to put its "Sweet Dreams" campaign on "Dirty Dancing," video spot sales have yet to set records.

"The real problem is to get advertisers to embrace video as an ad medium," says Jay Coleman, president of Rockbill Inc., an entertainment marketing company. "We're trying to establish video as another channel, a 'fourth network,' but advertisers are slow to respond."

Only a handful of major theatrical video releases have included commercials: Chrysler Corp.'s Jeep/Eagle division on "Platoon"; Nestle Foods Corp. on "Dirty Dancing"; Hershey's Kisses on "The Princess Bride"; Pepsi's "Floata" spot on "Innerspace" and Pepsi's Mountain Dew on the low-priced release of "Dirty Dancing," and Snickers on "Moonstruck." A Nestle's Crunch spot will appear on the Jan. 4 release of "Young Guns."

The stumbling block is that advertisers want quantifiable results while the studios do not want to equate video's uncluttered long-term commercial exposure with broadcast TV. The result is a more complicated deal.

"Conceptually advertisers believe ads on cassettes are an appropriate place to spend media dollars, but the question is how much," says Eric Kessler, VP-marketing, HBO Home Video.

Some companies use number of units ordered as a basis for payment, charging anywhere from $1 to $3 per tape to place a commercial. Others say rental transactions might be a better rate guide. Although impossible to determine before release, some suggest a minimum level be established and companies pay make-goods or receive bonus revenue depending on final rental totals.

"The problem is too little research," says Christine Alvarez, director of advertising, RCA/Columbia Pictures Home Video. Agencies want to verify and compare the number of impressions with network costs-per-thousand, she says.

Hershey and Pepsi paid about $2 per tape sold—an estimated $400,000 to $600,000—to place ads on "The Princess Bride" and "Innerspace," respectively. The advertisers struck a straight media buy instead of creating integrated cross-promotions.

The deal between Mars Inc. and MGM/UA Home Video to place a Snickers spot on "Moonstruck" hinged on Mars' willingness to lend marketing support. "We were not looking for X amount of dollars to put an ad on the tape," says Mr. Coleman, who helped engineer the agreement. "More important was the joint marketing effort where both brought money to the party."

Video companies don't want just ad dollars, says Louise Aliamo, VP-advertising and publicity for Nelson Home Entertainment. "We hope to have enough lead time to include cross-promotions to take advantage of an advertiser's consumer base the same way the company is trying to take advantage of ours." Nelson was eager to put ads on "The Last Emperor," but in the end opted for promotional deals with Chun King and Tsingtao beer.

The studios do not make much money by selling the time for cash, says Jerilyn Kessel, managing director, "Video-Flash." "Their revenues come from selling more units," which involves convincing retailers of consumer demand for a title via pre-release promotion and advertising.

"That costs more money and that's the reason the studios want a sponsor involved in more than one way," she says. "We've said from Day 1 that video will not be a mass medium like broadcast TV."

Media buyers say the video industry has not yet convinced them cassettes can be an effective ad vehicle. "You need a structure and a way to sell it as a package deal vs. title-by-title deals," says David R. Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "No one has tried to turn video into a medium."

the networks will get away with it because of the way time is bought. They will be able to keep CPMs down by adding the slots.

A second area networks can increase revenue in a flat market is to charge premiums for 15-second commercials. At least two networks have stated their intention to charge a premium—and they will face some resistance.

Advertisers will reduce their use of 15s before they pay premiums; they already have avoided 15s in spot TV buys because of premiums. Piggyback pools, where 15s are combined into a 30-second buy to avoid the charge, will be established.

The networks also are looking for ways to charge premium prices for shows by featuring products within programming. For example, they will levy a premium per commercial and stipulate a minimum number of spots per show to feature an advertiser's product in a show's script.

I suspect the premium for including the product will have very limited appeal. Advertisers will not be interested in paying significant sums of money to put their brands in a show. This policy also might discourage advertisers from buying time in a show where a competitor's products are being displayed in programming.

Even with declining audiences and revenues, the networks will continue to dominate national TV.

> Advertisers will reduce their use of 15s before they pay premiums; they already have avoided 15s in spot TV buys.
> Bill Hadlock

People watch programs, not stations or networks or cable or anything else. As long as the networks have the best programs—read "best" as most popular and not most critically acclaimed—they will draw the majority of viewers, sell spots on their programs for more money and continue to buy the best programs.

The fact that cable, and to a lesser extent syndication, have less than 100% coverage of the country contributes to network dominance. More coverage means larger ratings, which translates to more revenue because revenue increases growing geometrically as ratings rise, not arithmetically. A 20 rating is worth twice the CPM of a 10 rating but commands four times the unit cost.

So what, if anything, is going to change network dominance? Pay for view.

If the leading cable networks can get system operators to pay them significant fees to carry their shows, the whole game could change. Most major cable networks already collect per-subscriber fees from the system operators. But if fees were to rise to $1 a month, a cable network with a 40 million home subscriber base would raise $480 million a year, giving it a significant revenue base to bid for programming.

Depending how much cable and syndicated programming improves—and how far the broadcast networks push for premium prices to cover revenue losses—the networks' historical dominance of the TV marketplace may disappear.

Victim of its own success

Cable TV can't seem to escape web of low ad rates

By Wayne Walley

The darling of the TV business may have given itself enough cable to hang itself.

Cable TV has built a $1 billion-a-year business by offering advertisers a medium that is cheaper and more efficient than broadcast TV. But its efficiency has created a dilemma for today's cable executives: How to increase ad rates and revenues to achieve true market value without alienating customers.

While cable TV, according to the CableTelevision Advertising Bureau, might reach anywhere from one-quarter to one-third of the TV audience, it reaps only 8% to 9% of TV's total ad revenues.

Cable seems to be paying for its early days when demand was low and advertisers could essentially write their own ticket.

"If you continue to overly discount the price, you may never get that advertiser to true market value," says Jack Bonanni, senior VP-advertising sales, ESPN. Because ad budgets are based on previous year expenditures, cable sellers have two choices: Continue digging a hole or walk out on some business.

The solution is to establish a value and then stick with it, he says. "If we can't be ballsy now, when can we do it? We've broken the 50% penetration level. We're growing each month in the number of subscribers. Demand is growing geometrically while the broadcast network audiences continue to erode." Now is the time to increase the cost-per-thousand level, Mr. Bonanni says.

This is easier said than done. While those within the industry believe cable's CPM is too low, media buyers know price is negotiable because of cable's vast unsold ad inventory.

"The fact cable networks are 24 hours is a killer," says Bart McHugh, senior VP-director of national radio/broadcast, DDB Needham Worldwide, New York. "We buy cable because of its target audience. But the price is directly related to the amount of inventory and perceived value. To raise prices cable has to have more people who want it than don't want it."

Some suggest cable networks reduce their inventory by giving local operators more time or tightening inventory by running more on-air promotions in ad slots. If demand increases or even remains level while supply decreases, the industry theoretically could raise its rates.

But most cable executives consider this strategy unacceptable. "If you cut the number of spots in half, you have to charge double to stay even. That doesn't help," says Lloyd Werner, senior VP-sales and marketing, Group W Satellite Communications.

Artificially higher costs-per-thousand also could force advertisers to turn to other media. "You can justify a higher CPM because it is a competitive price or because your medium is worth it when the others are not worth the extra cost," Mr. Bonanni says.

Cable has long pushed the premise that its subscribers are better marketing targets because they can pay for TV and are more likely to purchase goods and services. While the theory has been corroborated by various studies and profiles of cable subscribers, media buyers now want more.

"Cable needs to show people practical results instead of philosophical arguments," says David R. Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "Maybe the future is showing a cost-per-sale instead of a CPM. But cable is doing a pretty good job," he says, adding that CPMs are up 10% this year and will increase 6% to 7% next year.

The Infomarketing division of Jack Myers Marketing Communications reports a majority of advertisers are likely to increase cable buys within the next two years. Of the 375 ad executives the company surveyed in August, 88% said they would increase cable buys greatly or slightly in the next 24 months compared with 58% for spot TV, 54% for network TV and 52% for syndication.

The study also showed 92% and 83% were satisfied or very satisfied with cable's ad frequency and CPM efficiency, respectively. However, 70% were dissatisfied with the standardized industry research data.

"Cable is working on it. It will [achieve true market value], but it will take time,"

View from the trenches: Cable TV

Merely more channels on the tube

Media director prods cable to sharpen its targeting

Ah, the magic year. Cable is glowing and gloating over having crossed the threshold of 50% household penetration one year ago.

Although reaching more than half of U.S. households should make cable an even more serious contender for national ad dollars, "the magic number for cable occurred years ago when cable reached 33% household penetration," says David R. Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. Cable penetration should reach 54% to 55% in 1989, he says.

The important factor next year will not be cable's penetration, but the penetration of the individual networks, Mr. Verklin says. In this article, he argues that the time has come to treat cable like other media.

By David R. Verklin

"Well Mabel, that was one heck of a meatloaf. What do you say we watch a little cable tonight?"

I'm convinced this conversation does not occur nightly in 52% of America's households, although so many marketers and agencies seem to believe it does.

Cable has become merely another television channel to the American TV viewer. Within the next 12 months, the advertising community will begin the long-awaited process of considering cable from the viewer's perspective.

Cable is no longer an emerging medium. It's entrenched. In fact, it's really not another "medium." It's just more programs on the tube.

Michael A. Marcotte

Cable fragmentation translates to opportunities, says David Verklin.

In the past, people scanned TV Guide to find out what was on TV. America is now using remote controls to sample the programs they might want to watch. The grazing generation has arrived and TV will never be the same.

Interestingly, declining network shares and viewer fragmentation are not necessarily bad news for marketers. Fragmentation has presented opportunities to deliver ad messages to specific groups at specific times.

Using greater frequency in more compatible environments, these spots mean lower overall costs-per-thousand. Next year the broadcast networks and their cable counterparts finally will learn to co-exist to the advertisers' benefit.

POINT OF ATTACK

If in doubt, promote

Cable is caught in a void of its own making, stuck between programming improvements and marketing support that still falls short. Next year promotional activities must close the gap, says Kay Koplovitz, president of USA Network.

"Program improvements in cable have come light years in the past five years, but our promotion and marketing efforts are lagging behind," Ms. Koplovitz says, blaming the situation on the complexities a cable operator faces in promoting 30 to 50 channels at the same time.

"USA has approached this problem by taking on long-term commitments for high-visibility shows," such as familiar off-network series "Miami Vice" and "Murder, She Wrote." This allows the network to focus promotional efforts on its original program series such as "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," "The Ray Bradbury Theatre," "The Hitchhiker," and its "World Premiere Movie" package that will debut next April.

Arnie Adler

USA Network's Kay Koplovitz is calling for joint promotions.

"Cable penetration is another area where the industry needs to make improvements," she says, adding that program offerings far exceed the consumers' understanding of what is available.

Consolidated efforts in the form of national and local promotions are needed, Ms. Koplovitz says. "Local newspaper and TV guide promotions, along with radio and TV spots, would go a long way toward promoting the product to non-subscribers."

A solution to improving viewership is to run more program-specific promotions in unsold local ad slots.

But cable will be fighting other battles next year. Regulatory issues, particularly in the area of breaking down competitive barriers, will become critical, Ms. Koplovitz says.

"The cable industry will be in the strongest position if the product—meaning programming and service—is of the highest quality and therefore able to withstand competitive entry. This industry began with the premise that competition was good and we ought to be able to win this game by the rules."

'How do you eat an elephant?'

For papers hunting national ads, it's 'A bite at a time'

By Eileen Norris

By all accounts, there will be no major breakthrough in the unrequited love newspapers have for national advertisers. No marriage proposals in 1989, nor in 1990. This couple may never tie the knot.

But they could, and that fact is frustrating media buyers. They talk about what might have been and what still could be.

Facing stagnant retail linage, newspaper executives obviously would love to increase their share of national advertising—the Newspaper Advertising Bureau says it is newspapers' No. 1 growth opportunity. But they want to proceed cautiously.

"How do you eat an elephant?" asks Roger Clapp, advertising director for Richmond Newspapers Inc., and president of the International Newspaper Advertising & Marketing Executives. "One bite at a time. We just have to nibble away at this."

The Newspaper Advertising Bureau's Future of Advertising Committee illustrates the pace. Designed to encourage advertisers in specific categories to mix newspapers into their media buy, the program has attracted only three new advertisers in more than a year.

Tom Herzberg

American Express, American Home Products Co. and Federal Express have signed on and the committee is pursuing a beer and fast food advertiser, says Lance Primis, exec VP of The New York Times and the committee chairman. "We're looking for ways to expand it and continue the momentum," he says, adding that the three-company gain meets the FOA's expectations.

But many ad executives say newspapers should capitalize on the fragmentation and competition within the broadcast industry. "We've always felt the time is right to bring national rates into line with local rates," says Jack Cohen, VP, director-print/outdoor media, DDB Needham, New York.

Newspapers would definitely get more national business by reducing rates, he adds.

National advertisers pay about 60% more than local retailers for newspaper space. But national retailers such as Sears, Roebuck & Co. or J.C. Penney Co. pay the lower retail space.

"If newspapers want national advertisers' business they will have to do certain things to get it. If we had a fairer national rate structure the percentage of dollars spent would go up for papers," Mr. Cohen predicts.

The newspaper industry has had increasing trouble luring national advertisers. Its share of national advertising dropped from 16% in 1950 to about 6% last year, according to industry records.

Some buyers suggest newspapers emulate magazines' negotiable rate cards or at least create one that has some flexibility. "Magazines are highly negotiable while newspapers, by and large, stick to the rate card. The client says, 'Gee, if I can negotiate with a magazine, why not?' " says Mr. Cohen.

Bringing national rates into line with local rates will require a lengthy courtship. Newspapers have a differential built into their profit structure, says Dan Pearson, senior group director-media for RJR Tobacco USA.

"But the bigger problem is that the rates charged make the newspaper a less attractive medium, especially when compared to others," he says. "Newspapers have to make themselves more attractive from a cost standpoint, and at the same time be more flexible and have a greater orientation to what the national advertiser is looking for."

View from the trenches: Newspapers

Publishers pitch in together

Rather gloomy outlook for medium spurs cooperation

Newspapers are discovering that a winning season is the hardest thing to duplicate. They boosted their share of media billings to 10.3% in 1987 from 9.8% in 1986 and billings from the Top 500 agencies to almost $3 billion from $2.7 billion. Still, seers predict final 1988 numbers will tell a different story.

Knight-Ridder Newspapers reports third-quarter retail and general advertising revenue fell below estimates; third-quarter ad linage is down 8% from 1987 at The New York Times; Times Mirror Co. blames low ad volume for its soft third-quarter results; the list goes on.

Newspapers are taking it on the chin particularly in retail and national ad revenue. Growth in classified ad linage—still the newspapers' domain—has bolstered overall results.

But with newsprint costs increasing and ad dollars declining in key categories, newspapers face an increasingly hostile environment.

Despite what he calls a "very tough" outlook for newspapers over the next few years, Mike Drexler, exec VP-media, Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, sees some signs of movement by newspaper publishers to satisfy advertisers' needs and improve their performance.

Doug Goodman

BJK&E's Mike Drexler sees papers acting to build ad base.

By Mike Drexler

To put it mildly, 1988 is not a robust year for newspapers. The 1987 stock market crash wrecked a great deal of financial linage, retail and classified placement was sluggish, and decreased spending from other major categories such as food, transportation, oil and gasoline contributed to a lackluster picture.

Worse yet, newspapers in 1989 will face higher operating costs, more competition, increased newsprint prices and advertisers that won't tolerate rate increases much beyond the expected inflation rate.

The next few years look tough for newspapers; they face

Reposition in media mix

Bad news redux for newspapers: Costs are up, subscriptions and ad rates are up, ad linage is soft, circulation is down.

"Those trends are turning up with regularity," says John Siegenthaler, president and publisher of Nashville's The Tennessean, and editorial director of USA Today.

"The challenge as a publisher will be no different next year than it has been any other year: To provide a quality newspaper and return a meaningful profit," Mr. Siegenthaler says, adding that process has been made exceedingly more difficult by an inflationary cost spiral.

Newspapers must be more

John Siegenthaler looks to buck the regular downward trends.

proactive, Mr. Siegenthaler says. "We've been reactive so long, at times it's almost negative. We know there will be price increases and circulation drops, but if you get locked into that cycle it kills the incentive for new and creative approaches to increasing business."

The medium should seize the opportunity to capitalize on advertisers' concerns with other media. "It's very clear advertisers are confused by the fractionalization and Balkanization of TV audiences," he says.

"Advertisers talk more about the problems of delivering audiences than rate increases," he says, adding that they are looking for certifiable audiences that newspapers deliver and prove via audits. Yet the industry hasn't addressed the potential of positioning newspapers against other media, Mr. Siegenthaler says. "There has not even been enough experimentation to tell what works," he adds.

Still, newspapers largely remain at the mercy of their home markets. Plant openings, for instance, in the Nashville area have helped The Tennessean.

The best news for newspapers would be legislative incentives to expand plant development, he says, adding that President-elect George Bush knows the business community "has been holding its nose and keeping one hand on its pocketbook. If he makes moves to build confidence immediately, I anticipate newspaper publishers will be breathing easier and taking their hands off those pocketbooks."

Growth depends on finer tuning

Listenership up, yet sales are stuck; an insider looks to breaking the jam

Give radio some credit. In the last 18 months it has been challenged up and down the dial, yet radio stations are being acquired for increasingly higher prices, hinting that some believe its troubles are only temporary.

Reduced ad budgets are biting into radio's share and sales are flat.

Network radio revenues in 1987 stood at $371 million—flat from 1986—while spot lost $18 million to $1.3 billion.

From January to June 1988, spot increased 9% to $724.6 million, and network jumped 17.6% to $307.5 million.

Final figures for 1988 will be flat, predicts Sam Michaelson, VP, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York. In addition to soft sales, audiences are fragmenting and competition is increasing on national and spot levels from cable TV.

"The national media budget process followed a simple path: After network TV dollars had been established, national radio would take the leftovers," says Ms. Michaelson.

But 1988 budgets increasingly were directed to national cable rather than radio to make up the shortfall from network TV's declining audience base, she says.

And while Ms. Michaelson does not see the stresses abating in 1989, "I am witnessing a fundamental change in how radio is being sold that proves that the people behind the scenes are learning to survive, adapt and grow."

For example, this year radio sellers moved to create more precise measurement standards, she says.

In the following article, Ms. Michaelson indicates what radio must do to tune up the revenue.

By Sam Michaelson

Radio growth fell below the rate of inflation in 1988, the first time I can recall such an occurrence. This stands out in stark contrast to the record high-ticket sales of radio stations.

Here's the clincher: Inventory growth is outpacing advertiser demand on all fronts—spot, network and syndication. Ironically, radio continues to show gains in listenership. Raising demand for the medium is the only way to reverse the downturn.

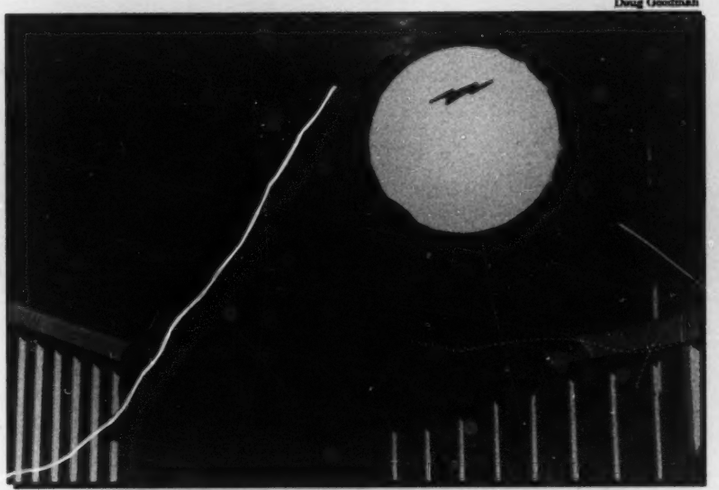
Radio is such a part of our lives that many advertisers take it for granted. While few clients question its ability to communicate ideas and sell product, most do not devote a major portion of their budgets to it.

Radio loses the battle for the budget against the glamorous outlets because it is unfairly perceived as a high impact/low status medium.

The optimist in me says this is a time of opportunity for radio. But not without some fallout first. Several players are being squeezed, and in 1989 some of the smaller tents might close.

Right now there is a glut of programming at fair prices.

Doug Goodman



Radio adds audience, yet unsold inventory goes begging, says Sam Michaelson.

This spells a big opportunity for advertisers that move into the market now. An implosion caused by improved audience measurement is possible next year, which would make the market very tight, very fast—although there will never be a shortage of inventory.

Oddly enough, several economists' predictions of a recession bode well for the medium. Radio's cost-efficiency and the low out-of-pocket advertising costs work in its favor during tight economic times.

Many advertisers also move to a more promotional and retail-oriented strategy during recessions. Because of its image as a local medium, radio is perceived as being more successful in pushing retail messages. In addition to extending reach and building frequency, radio is effective as a promotional tool.

National radio also has finally overcome its greatest disadvantage: the lack of precise measurement, particularly among radio syndicators. In 1988, exact time-period measurement criteria became the rule, not the exception, in the New York marketplace. And it is becoming the standard in the rest of the U.S.

It is hoped it will become the industry standard next year. Some larger sellers will resist providing this information, but the smarter ones will.

Issues such as determining tune-in factors and tracking programming schedules and commercial airings hung over the industry like a cloud. Today, even the smallest syndicator is capable of tracking this sophisticated information via on-line access to Arbitron Ratings Co. or Birch Scarborough Research tapes.

As exact time audience measurements guarantee advertisers are getting what they pay for, toward the end of next year it is possible syndicated radio will no longer be considered an afterthought media buy. However, negotiated costs-per-point have not yet risen to compensate for more precise audience tallies.

While costs per thousand will generally increase 4% to 6% next year, CPMs may decrease in markets where new signals are coming on the air. Audience fragmentation has kept CPMs down on adult targeted stations; the youth market has been a little stronger because there are fewer outlets.

Radio also needs to market itself differently.

In the last year, the big news in radio has been the price tags of radio stations, the price of Westwood One stock, how much money Casey Kasem wanted to stay at ABC, the possible selling price of United Stations or the price of the National Football League rights bid at CBS.

Certainly, this proves radio's value as a profit center, but there still is a need to motivate clients to invest more of their budget in radio.

What motivates clients to use radio are winning campaigns with great creative. This may come off as old fashioned, but nothing is more delightful than good radio.

Radio salesmen should sell this aspect of their medium at agencies' creative departments. The greatest way to raise demand for radio is to educate creative groups.

For example, the Radio Advertising Bureau is making joint presentations to creative teams and media buyers on what makes radio unique and how to make great radio commercials.

There is improvement, however. Salesmen no longer wait by the phone for calls; instead they are making a tremendous effort to develop new clients. Also, radio stations are spending significantly more dollars in promotion, both on and off the air, to listeners and media buyers.

But the key to radio's longevity lies in its audience gains. While radio has been facing pressure on many fronts, it hasn't lost any ground with listeners.

POINT OF ATTACK

Radio set to go platinum

Having fallen from its once-lofty pinnacle during its Golden Age in the '30s and '40s, radio now looks up at television.

While spot and network radio attracted $1 billion in ad revenue in the first six months of 1988, TV amassed $9.5 billion when network, spot, cable and syndication are combined.

But Norm Pattiz, chairman of Westwood One, says to forget the Golden Age. Radio, he claims, is entering the Platinum Age as TV stumbles through trying times.

"It will be impossible to get a firm handle on what TV will be like in the late, even the mid-'90s," he says. "Radio is benefitting because radio will be essentially the same."

Radio's biggest challenge is to promote itself and become more visible, especially in light of changes in other media, he says. Network TV will continue to lose share and cable TV will not be able to sustain its rate of growth, Mr. Pattiz predicts. "The opportunities will be ours as changes in video occupy and concern those people."

Norm Pattiz

But technological and regulatory changes will keep TV in the spotlight. "So much is likely to change in the TV business that we must take the offensive. We can't let all the focus be on what happens in the TV business," he says.

The radio industry must raise its visibility among advertisers and dispel the thought that it's anything less than cutting edge, Mr. Pattiz says. It also must reiterate its ability to fit effectively and efficiently into advertisers' increasingly segmented marketing plans.

The radio market's continued fractionalization is not a problem, but an opportunity. "Now the goal is to know the fractional markets and to modify network programming for the markets," adding that the radio marketplace is as fragmented as it possibly can be.

"Sure there's format duplication, but it's just a product of cycles," Mr. Pattiz says. If listeners flock to a new format other stations will adopt the format to compete for the audience, he says. "But eventually success eludes some of the players. And then it's on to the next format."

For example, the New Age format will be out of fashion in a few years, he says. "It will be old age."

While radio will undergo changes, it won't change fundamentally, Mr. Pattiz says. "It will always be the medium you listen to at the beach, when you're sitting in traffic."

View from the trenches: Outdoor

Price right, but hurdles remain

Fighting cigarette, alcohol losses, medium erects welcome sign for retail

The outlook for media hasn't changed for years: Another year, another rate increase. Next year will be no exception in the world of outdoor advertising, although increases should be moderate, according to Robert Flood, senior VP, director-corporate outdoor of DMB&B, St. Louis.

Mr. Flood predicts rates for 30-sheet posters will increase 4.5% in the Top 100 markets, while costs for rotating painted bulletins and eight-sheet posters will rise 4% and 7%, respectively. The latter would have risen about 4% except a major eight-sheet company boosted its rates at double-digit levels, he says.

In the Top 50 markets, transit rates will increase 6%, and bus shelter ad rates will climb 5%. High-traffic airport and taxi advertising will jump 8% and 6%, respectively, Mr. Flood says.

"Many of the increases will be ameliorated by off-rate card negotiations," especially in markets where similar outdoor media compete, he says. Higher costs in some out-of-home media will be offset by increases in traffic volume, retarding cost-per-thousand increases, "one area where out-of-home still compares favorably with the other major media," Mr. Flood says.

Yet, outdoor advertising companies read the writing on the wall: Primary advertiser categories—cigarettes and liquor—continue to face adverse business climates.

Outdoor isn't taking a complete pasting; spending increased 12.9% to $341.5 million during the first six months of 1988 compared with the same period last year.

Five of the medium's Top 10 advertisers reduced outdoor budgets, and newspapers were the only medium with a lower growth rate.

Barring major upheavals, however, 1989 looks like a repeat of 1988 with most out-of-home trending moderately upward, Mr. Flood says.

Below he discusses the market's dynamics and how they will affect outdoor activity next year.

By Robert Flood

Outdoor companies are looking at the big picture in assessing the big boards' potential. They hope the higher cost of spot TV vs. network TV, increasing channel choices and eroding ratings, will prompt some advertisers to direct a greater portion of their budget out of the family room and into the streets.

They also say outdoor's low CPMs will attract advertisers emphasizing regional marketing approaches.

As a result, major outdoor operators will target retail and package-goods advertisers more than ever.

Don Byer, president of the Institute of Outdoor Advertising, reports the retail category is up about 30% this year and has supplanted beer, wine and liquor as the No. 2 outdoor spender.

Although outdoor's reliance on tobacco advertising has declined, it is still No. 1, causing a nagging concern among some operators.

Growth in package goods probably won't be as dramatic as retail's 30% surge, but with some effort from the industry this category has no place to go but up. Healthcare is another category with tremendous volume that has not yet been tapped adequately.

Outdoor operators must address three issues to add new customers. The load factor—average persons per car—needs to be revised, and the Traffic Audit Bureau is studying how to address this.

Bill Stover

Outdoor rate increases may be negated by negotiations, says Bob Flood.

In addition, reach/frequency data needs updating. Because TAB's audited circulation figures form the heart of these numbers, the load factors must be updated first. Hopefully the new Harris-Donovan Audience Measurement System will win approval and replace the current Audience Market-by-Market for Outdoor system that some find faulty.

Advertisers also need a performance audit system that confirms designs are posted in the right place at the right time. A pilot program in five markets is testing the viability of a proposed system.

Of all the out-of-home categories, the eight-sheet poster has shown the largest inventory growth in the last five years, up about 25% to the current total of about 150,000 locations. Fueling the eight-sheet boom is local-level sales growth, which promises to continue.

Advertisers' strong interest in targeting Hispanics promises to continue next year, which should help the eight-sheet business. It is a relatively low-cost way to target geographically contained ethnic groups without wasting circulation.

Tobacco business is up slightly in 1988, and not much change is expected for 1989. The liquor category is off slightly for 1988 and will probably maintain that trend in 1989.

Interest in backlighted eight-sheets remains stable, and no change is foreseen. In the "what's new" department look for the introduction of the front-lighted, eight-sheet posters in some markets.

While eight-sheets will be slightly up, look for slow growth in the number of markets served by bus shelter advertising and a moderate increase in total number of units for 1989. San Francisco, San Diego and Phoenix were added in 1988, bringing to 38 the number of markets served by bus shelters. National shelter inventory increased 700 units or 11%.

Billings for 1988 will hit $2[illegible] million to $25 million with retail the leading category. Other significant users include media, entertainment, beer, financial, fast food and real estate. The sales outlook for 1989 appears stable and rates should increase an average of 5%.

Computer painting of bulletin faces should grow in 1989 as more operators equip their structures to accept the vinyl "Flex Face" or gain experience working with the adhesive-backed faces. The growth of this will hinge partly on outdoor companies compensating advertisers for producing the faces because the cost of hand painting currently included in space rates is not deducted.

Computer painting hopefully will become more competitively priced as equipment is amortized and technology improved. It is not a panacea for the industry—and not even a competitor to the printing press in longer runs—but it does bring the world's oldest medium into the 21st century a little early, offering clear, consistent reproduction.

The variety of supplementary out-of-home media has grown inordinately. More than 120 forms of alternative out-of-home media have hit the market in the past five years; 25 have been introduced in the past 18 months, including four of the 14 truck media companies.

Many of the new forms—including Ad Mat, Coupon Solution, Super Sign, P-O-P Radio—center in and near supermarkets and convenience stores and have enjoyed measurable success. Others are located in bars and restaurants, schools, airplanes, ski resorts, golf courses, video rental stores, health clubs, hotels, malls and theaters while others are on the sides of trucks and phone booths.

Not all of these will make the cut. But one or more could outdistance the current out-of-home leaders not too far down the road, particularly those in close proximity to the point of purchase.

POINT OF ATTACK

Walk softly; carry big board

Advertising outdoors is no picnic.

Although the medium is growing—the Institute of Outdoor Advertising projects 1988 revenues will rise 7% to $1.4 billion—outdoor controls only about 1.4% of total advertising revenue. It also faces the daunting task of attracting new advertisers while fighting critics who call outdoor "visual pollution."

Don Davidson, president of Gannett Co.'s Gannett Outdoor Group, says a focus on new outdoor venues is key to the industry's health. He also touts greater flexibility and experimentation, both in dealing with outdoor's critics and in developing creative options for new advertisers.

"We need to get more categories into the medium and we've had some success with this in 1988," he says, mentioning growth in package-goods advertisers. Procter & Gamble, for example, increased its 1987 outdoor spending 187.4% to $842,000 from 1986.

"Interestingly, P&G had us participate in a seminar they had on new media, when we're actually one of the oldest mediums around. That tells you a lot about advertisers' perception of the medium."

Don Davidson

He says the industry must do a better job of positioning itself against other media. New computer-based research tools, such as Donnelley Marketing's Conquest system, also should be used to attract more advertisers, Mr. Davidson says.

Outdoor also should focus increasingly on its ability to hit segmented targets. "Some advertisers still see it as a mass medium and use it that way," he says. "Others are using it more carefully, and affordably, to hit audience segments." Adjacency and proximity to point-of-transaction is another area to stress, especially to food and package-good companies, Mr. Davidson says.

Part of the growth process involves boosting the medium's image, he says. "We need to tell our side of the story."

Legislation restricting the number and location of outdoor boards is pending in a handful of cities, and already is on the books in Denver, Jacksonville, Fla., St. Louis and Maricopa County, Ariz. Alaska, Hawaii, Maine and Vermont have banned outdoor boards.

Mr. Davidson describes outdoor's critics as "a vocal minority." While the group is small, a dialog must be maintained, he says. "The most important thing is for us to keep a nonconfrontational attitude."

Pricing

Cable acceptance up; penetration too low

Although advertiser acceptance of cable is growing, the demand is still far short of the supply of commercial positions available.

Cable's main problem remains: Few individual cable programs deliver audience with ratings even as high as 1% of total U.S. TV homes.

Cable unit rates should rise only slightly more than the broadcast networks, about 5% in 1989. Cable TV CPMs will probably be up about 6%. Most of the additional sales volume will come from buys made on previously unsold inventory with somewhat lower ratings and smaller audience levels.

Not enough demand for network radio

The supply of available network radio time exceeds advertiser demand. But prices for the most desirable time slots may rise in line with the expected inflation rate of about 5% in 1989.

The remaining positions that went unsold or at bargain basement prices this year may show some improvement in 1989 simply because their prices were quite low in 1988. Prices could rise by about 4% overall in 1989.

Spot radio falls below inflation

The demand for spot radio time has been sluggish for the last few years and only moderately better in 1988. In post-Olympics 1989, buying demand should remain low. Rate increases are expected to be lower than inflation, coming in around 3%.

Newspaper linage down; rates up

The prices for national newspaper ads have risen faster than the general inflation rate in the last three years. Not coincidentally national ad linage has declined in most markets. In 1989 national rates will probably be raised about 6% despite slumping space orders.

Magazines flat, but competitive

Magazine ad pages have been flat for several years and competition for orders has held down the net prices realized by most magazines. Because of higher paper and postage expenses most magazines are announcing 6% to 7% basic rate hikes.

However, competition for orders will continue to be intense and rate cards will be modified throughout the year.

Unit price increases in 1989 should level out around 4%. As a result of some reduction in circulation guarantees, CPMs are expected to increase 6%.

Outdoor draws blank

Outdoor ad sales continue to suffer because of declining orders from cigarette and alcoholic-beverage marketers. The outdoor companies have a lot of unsold boards, allowing buyers to hold price hikes to a minimum in many markets.

Unit prices for outdoor showings on average are expected to be up 4% in 1989. With slightly higher traffic counts, typical CPMs should rise 3% next year.

Mail stung by quadruple-whammy

The price of mailings has been affected by higher postage charges, but even more by the rising paper, printing and list procurement costs. In 1988 the cost of all these factors rose sharply.

However, in 1989 the price pressure should be in line with the general inflation rate and the cost increase of a typical mailing should be about 5%.

Post-Olympics stress

The media face not only the post-Olympics, post-election year letdown, but an increasingly guarded view of the nation's economic outlook. In addition, the number of brands with continuity ad schedules continues to decline.

The demand is soft at the same time that the supply of advertising units is effectively being expanded by the growth in the use of preprints and 15-second spots, creating a classic supply-demand situation that should lead to a buyer's market.

Although inflation in the general economy should be somewhat higher in 1989, it is not likely that these higher cost pressures will reinflate media rates.

1989. Instead of generating studies that say there is relatively no difference between readership in the front and back of the book, it is time for a more enlightened approach.

Publishers should discuss positioning problems with clients and agencies before the schedule is determined. Big accounts should receive a requested position; smaller advertisers may be forced to pay a premium.

There will be more use of spectacular units in 1989 and an increase in special issues as advertisers try to rise above the clutter. Rates in specials also are negotiated more readily.

Magazines will get an increasing share of their revenue from regional and local market editions. However, they must create a revised pricing structure to fit into advertisers' local/regional marketing plans because the premiums paid for regional buys are too high.

Despite these efforts to increase magazines' share of the media mix, they will show a modest page gain of 2% and a revenue gain of 8% to 10% next year. The major increases should come from automotive, toiletries and cosmetics, direct response retail, travel, computer and office equipment and health products.

This year magazines will be fortunate to finish ahead in pages over 1987. Despite publishers' efforts to position the medium as flexible and cost-effective, the story for 1989 will be similar.

says Mr. McHugh. "They are not going to jam it down our throats overnight.

"I've said this before, and people don't like it, but we do buy eyeballs. We're trying to sell product and sales are directly proportional to the eyeballs we reach," he says. "Cable has the potential to only reach 53% or 54% of the households. If they had 97% coverage and matched broadcast ratings, they could command the same CPM."

Increased competition from new cable channels adding more inventory also poses a problem. "More than anything else, new networks with more inventory have held down unit prices and CPMs," says Dick Hammer, managing director-advertising sales, CBN Family Channel, New York. To raise prices cable must provide better service and more viewers with more desirable demographics, which will come only with programming improvements, he says.

Another solution is to add value to media buys with program sponsorship, product placement or other incentives. "Get the advertiser involved, Mr. Werner says.

Cable networks also have more leeway in terms of product placement in programs than broadcast networks. Beatrice Cos., for example, sponsors "Country Kitchen" on TNN and certain Beatrice products are usually in the kitchen.

"To get our fair share we might build a program for an advertiser," Mr. Werner says. "If an advertiser had $200,000 to spend and didn't care, all viewers and CPMs are alike. But we try to give an added value or some sort of zap protection. You don't do it blatantly and obviously, but it can be done subtly."

Cable sellers cannot compare their medium to network TV, he says. "If you walk into a time buyer and say you're no different than CBS, they'll say, 'You're only in 50% of the households, the equivalent of the worst daytime show on CBS. We buy it for a $2 CPM, so we'll buy you for $1.75 because you're less than the worst on CBS.' If you walk in and say, 'I'm different' you get away from being tagged the worst," Mr. Werner says.

Jack Myers, president of his own consultancy, says cable CPMs should be higher than broadcast TV's. The ability to target a narrow audience is considered a premium in most media, he says. "But in TV it's become a liability."

Cable's effort to be accepted as a "mainstream" media could push it away from its value as client-oriented media, Mr. Myers says.

"The answer is for cable to make sure it is responsive to marketing needs vs. simply providing eyes. The challenge of cable is how to do both," Mr. Myers says. AA capacity worthwhile. Don't be surprised if more major awards shows, first-run movies, miniseries or major sports events are aired exclusively on advertiser-supported cable by 1990. Cable's promise will be realized through vertical networks offering unique, tightly defined programming concepts. Unfortunately, smaller networks will have trouble selling inventory in 1989.

Expect two or three networks to emerge in 1989 and one network to fold. Also anticipate more than one to change ownership; Wall Street will be infatuated with cable again in 1989.

Nothing to write home about

The writers' strike was predicted as a magic moment for cable, giving recalcitrant network-only advertisers the final push into significant cable schedules. Those who said this really don't understand "the medium."

Cable is more like radio than broadcast TV with a few notable exceptions. Cable is not and should not be considered a substitute for network numbers. It is a CPM softener, or a targeted, low out-of-pocket, high frequency way to use TV.

The hot spot

Spot cable is one of the hottest ideas in TV. The remaining problems are almost logistical.

Centralized access to salesmen will emerge in 1989. National companies will represent local operators in one Area of Dominant Influence and sell a whole market or group of systems within a market at prices competitive with spot TV. Generating research that details cost-per-point vs. the current cost-per-spot also will become a priority. Hard interconnects will eliminate the time-consuming task of bicycling tapes to 15 systems in a single ADI.

Pricing will begin to reflect the idea that spot cable can compete with classic broadcast spot. Local cable reps need to hire high-powered spot TV salesmen to run the business and advertisers will beat a path to their door in 1989.

Let's be upfront

Cable upfront has already happened, will grow and is a sure bet for the 1990s and beyond. Upfront will grow next year by about 10% vs. 1988-89.

Remember that cable booked $1.1 billion in sales, with a hefty portion in upfront last year. But don't forget the networks did $9 billion.

Just who do they think they are?

We started to see the emergence of the cocky cable salesman in 1988. Get ready, it will continue in 1989.

Total cable spending will be up about 10% to 12% next year. CPMs should be up by perhaps 7%. My advice to cable salesmen is to think longer term. They should stop swinging at other cable networks and start talking about buys that involve more than just their network. It's also time they stopped swiping at broadcast networks and work harder on clients that already book business and offer long-term deals.

Cable networks should pitch their ability to move merchandise. Let's see some case studies of positive changes in awareness, intent, usage and, most of all, sales volume.

There's a difference between being cocky and confident; 1989 is the year to make friends and regroup. The competition is not with the networks, it's for the viewer's share of mind.

What does that viewer really think? I think Mabel just told Harvey to stop changing channels with that damn remote, or she'll wrap the meatloaf pan around his head. AA

Doc prescribes a few remedies

Cable is at that awkward age—not a kid anymore, not quite an adult. It is clear some of the networks are having trouble struggling to maturity, according to David R. Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners.

Below the Cable Doctor puts out his shingle, gestures to the couch and offers advice and therapy.

USA Network—Your promotional mailings are the best in the industry. You're also the only network that continues to sell cable as an industry.

It's unfortunate that "Miami Vice" and "Murder She Wrote" reruns are your key programs. It's time to bid for some major sports or big-name programming events.

And give your research director a raise.

ESPN—You're in the big leagues now. Your NFL programming points tellingly at the potential of the wired TV signal, with your second-year games getting ratings estimates of 10 and 11.

But stop selling your NFL games in a package with a matching amount of regular inventory. We don't like it when the networks do it, and we don't like it when you do it, either.

You're the industry leader, so bid for bigger, better and more highly rated sporting events. The NFL is a fabulous start. How about Major League Baseball? How about a piece of the Olympics?

CNN—The most aggressive sales force in the business. Stop selling on a program-by-program basis to AT&T but on a rotation to Slim Whitman.

You're more like an all-news radio station: low ratings, fabulous demographics, terrific frequency. Sell it like radio; don't sell it like network TV.

Relax, you're a terrific network, but not "the world's most important."

WTBS—The Braves are far from "America's Team," but we love the job you've done with "National Geographic." You're committed to family-oriented programming. Your ratings will continue to grow.

You were cable before cable was cool. Now you're in cable when cable is cocky.

A&E—The Cinderella network on the brink of becoming a major player. It's time for you to buy some major programming. Make a bid for one of the awards shows.

But we love the fact that you're the only network that still lets us hear Walter Cronkite. How about producing more of your own documentaries and less PBS reruns?

Lifetime—If it were not for "Attitudes," you'd put us all to sleep. How about something in prime time?

HBO, Cinemax, Movie Channel, etc.— I predicted you would take some form of advertising every year for the last two, and I'll continue to predict it for 1989. You're going to let advertisers run some spots during movie breaks or you'll agree to take a four-minute intermission within a film. You'll come knocking next year.

Your subscriber base just won't grow or pay enough for you to compete against home video for product in 1989 and 1990. You need the advertising community, and we'd like to work with you—1989 will be the year.

The Travel Channel—Does Carl Icahn really need money that badly? Carl, sell it to someone who really wants to make a go of it.

It's a terrific programming concept for certain clients. The Travel Channel is a perfect example of the benefits of fragmentation, but let's see some numbers in 1989.

MTV and VH-1—The thrill is gone. You've got to mix some programming in with videos.

The changes you made in 1988 were in the right direction. Cable is a medium that was meant to evolve. Go for it.

Nickelodeon/Nick at Night—With 37 million subscribers, you're a hitter. Although advertisers are searching for ways to reach children and young adults, you're still the biggest secret in town.

To the buying community, you're incorrectly viewed as the place for after-school specials and a glass of Bosco. Next year run a hard-hitting trade campaign and throw some money toward a major tune-in effort.

You need to show us that you're in touch and hip. You've got a product to market just like the rest of us. Do it. AA

Passion cools for media buying pools

There has been a lot of big talk concerning the possibility of pooling media buying in Europe and elsewhere, leading to discussions on client reaction, conflicts and clout.

Although the passion for pooled media has cooled, media directors talk about the concept and how to increase clout.

Katz

Schultz

Heller

Cheryl Kroyer, senior VP, media director, Ketchum Advertising

"This strategy creates a bottom line-oriented buying service mentality. In such an environment you're not as concerned with the richness of the media mix, the quality of the targeting.

"You've also got to ask why a big client would want a small client to hang on to its clout coattails. What's in it for them?

"I also can't believe that the media can afford to give major price reductions just because they're working with group buyers. The media can't let any one company or agency become so important that they take control. Although if times ever get tough, they'll do anything they can to get the business.

"I started thinking consolidated buying would never happen here because there's too much working against it, but if the economy gets worse or the networks and big media companies get into trouble anything could happen."

Louis Schultz, exec VP, Lintas: Campbell-Ewald

"There is a point where you become too big. If you are dealing in upfront and can control 33% of inventory, the media can't cut a deal because it hurts their bottom line.

"Here the big agencies are within a couple of cents of each other on major media buys, anyway. Still 1% of $100 million is a lot of money.

"You could consolidate buys within an existing system. For example, Interpublic could create a major buying arm and have it handle non-competitive IPG brands. However, you have to be careful that other brands related to the group but not served by the buying arm are not put at a disadvantage."

Art Heller, exec VP, Griffin Bacal Inc.

"The independent buying services handle about 30% of total media business in England and have become a formidable challenger to agencies. This is a response to that challenge. If [buying combines] were to happen here it would be an overresponse to the current challenge in the U.S.

"I'm not a supporter of the potential merger of media departments on the basis of clout. When we talk clout we're emphasizing dollar clout that exists, but is not the sole determining factor.

"It not only raises client conflict problems and questions of how to distribute media buys among agencies, but provides agencies with the 'opportunity' to give clients less service. Merger mania was presented as a way to provide more service. In fact, there have been a lot of cutbacks.

"We are a service business. We must have a terrible wish to hurt ourselves."

Hal Katz, exec VP, Vitt Media International

"I think the programs will fail in Europe. A lot of the media is placed by buying services, which are already owned by mega-agencies.

"Clients were unhappy with megamergers because they didn't see benefits. Agencies see the benefit in increasing media clout. But it's simply a hidden megamerger. They will tell clients it's a way to increase clout, but it really is a way to reduce staff because 40% of staff will be cut. Clout is not money, but how you think and the people you bring to the table to exploit the efficiencies.

"Anyway, they act like they'll increase their clout by combining billings to $11 billion from $5 billion. Who in their right mind can say $5 billion is not a lot of clout already?"

Man does not buy by rates alone, says John Kosanke, president of Knight-Ridder Newspaper Sales. "Rates can be an inducement, but it's an addendum to a marketing plan. We're reaching out and papers are getting more flexible."

The purchase is a matter of pricing, positioning and convenience, he says. "The momentum is building, but we won't get there in 1989."

To reduce national ad rates, newspapers would have to raise retail and classified rates, says Mr. Clapp. That cannot be done because the first category is down and the other relatively flat. "It's really a Catch-22 situation." Newspapers that have lowered rates under special marketing plans are getting the same total business at the lower price level, he says.

A newspaper industry discount plan that offered national advertisers up to a 30% rate reduction attracted more than 200 newspapers. However, only a handful of advertisers, including Campbell Soup Co. and Perdue Farms, picked up on the deal. "But the program is moving along," insists Jim Wilson, NAB senior VP-national sales.

Too many conflicts among newspapers arose concerning the package-goods rate plan's criteria, says Bud Shields, VP, manager-newspaper buying group, Lintas:Campbell-Ewald.

The plan clearly stipulates advertisers must buy at least a ¼-page ad 13 times a year to qualify for the rate. "But different papers have different definitions of what constitutes a package good," Mr. Cohen says. "Some say beer, some say over-the-counter drugs and toiletries. Some accept coupons, some do not.

"It was a good first step, but there's a limit as to which kind of advertiser can use it and how they can use it," Mr. Cohen says, a problem compounded by the papers' inability to agree on those limitations.

"You've got 1,600-to-1,800 different individuals running the newspapers and they all have different ideas," says Mr. Pearson.

NAB does not take a firm stand on the rate-disparity issue because its members are split on the subject, says Mr. Wilson. "There are several things we have agreed upon as an industry to make newspapers easier to plan, evaluate and use."

Recent developments include using a standardized advertising invoice and eliminating minimum-size requirements for color ads. "We are stressing a market-driven approach, offering more flexibility and increased standardization," he says.

But agency executives reiterate that newspapers may be missing their best chance to make inroads into new territory. "The national advertiser is in a quandry about the broadcast business, what with cable, the networks, independents and VCR zapping," says Mr. Shields. "It's a perfect opportunity for newspapers to capitalize on the fragmentation of the broadcast industry."

Broadcasters probably will counteract their problems before newspapers react, he says. "One or two years is the most time the newspaper industry has to increase its share of national ad dollars."

a weak ad climate because there's nothing on the horizon to spur the economy. Competition for local dollars particularly looks great.

In addition to the issues of relative pricing and cost efficiencies of alternate media, there's growing competition from cable TV. Local cable operators have become much more aggressive in marketing their programs to both local and national advertisers, giving newspapers an aggressive competitor on their turf.

The medium also continues to be plagued by the use of free standing inserts to replace run-of-press insertions. One bright spot is national advertisers' growing interest in doing local and regional promotions in conjunction with retailers.

Of course, the constant debate of the national/retail rate differential has not been put to rest—and it may never be resolved. The best we can hope for is a tangible sign that publishers are willing to help national advertisers by reducing the disparity. It is encouraging to see further incentives built into the national advertising discount structure.

Interest is up in forming joint efforts such as two programs involving American Express where ads for its corporate card and traveler's cheques were placed in similar positions on the first stock market page and the weather page, respectively. Newspapers also participated in an extensive merchandising effort in the second program.

Specialized space units, franchise positions, single-sponsored sections, couponing tie-ins and consecutive insertion programs are only a few of a newer, wider range of placement options.

Newspaper publishers also recognize the need to standardize space contracts, invoices, Standard Rate & Data Service listings, advertising positions and rate structures.

Publishers are realizing national advertisers need to know buys can be planned and structured in a similar way across many markets. If advertisers want to tailor their campaigns for different parts of the country, they must be able to use regional clusters of newspapers.

Newspapers are starting to acknowledge this need. The Impact and Flex plans permit multiple coupon placements and allow advertisers to tie into seasonal-themed coupon promotions, respectively. These Gannett Co.-repped plans, which allow advertisers both national and regional options, will expand next year.

Newspaper publishers are beginning to accept that they no longer can do business as if each publisher were an island. Standardizing research data, pricing structures, creative executions, merchandising and promotional support and color capability must grow if national ad revenues are to grow.

So far the type of ad rate negotiations common in the magazine industry haven't happened in the newspaper market because there aren't too many dual-paper markets to stimulate a price war. It could happen in selected markets and may on a larger scale because of the business environment.

But I don't think it will break wide open. It's more likely publishers will focus more on frequency discounts and favored ad positioning.

But publishers must continue to adapt if they are to prosper. They have learned they can no longer take their readerships, retail ad base or the promise of national advertising for granted.

RADIO FINALLY TUNES IN RESEARCH

A reunion of sorts took place in New York on Nov. 18 to get a tenacious monkey off Spanish radio's back. The Spanish Radio Advisory Council, which was folded into an Advertising Research Foundation subcommittee, reconvened to review Birch Scarborough Research's proposed methodology to measure Hispanic radio listenership (AA, Sept. 26, 1987, et. seq.).

"The committee voted unanimously to endorse us," said Tom Birch, company chairman, ending months of bickering among stations, research companies, agencies and marketers concerning Spanish radio measurement methodology.

While the endorsement essentially represents only a vote of confidence, stations and agencies are expected to begin subscribing to Birch. Major Hispanic radio rep company Caballero Spanish Media already subscribes to Birch, as do a number of top Hispanic agencies. At press time Birch was negotiating with Tichenor Spanish Radio, the largest Spanish-language station group.

"If Tichenor is ready to buy and Caballero and Katz [Hispanic Radio] go along, that swings it," said Abbott Wool, senior VP-media director, Cadwell Davis Partners, and SRAC chairman. "Big station owners seem to be going along."

Not all of the concerns have been addressed, said Betty Ann Morse, VP, media research director, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. "Although I think this is a step in the right direction."

One of the primary failings remains the lack of a door-to-door component; Birch performs telephone interviews and committee members and station owners wanted a door-to-door element to compare results.

Ms. Morse said the ARF subcommittee is hoping to mount a study to determine if phone ownership affects listenership patterns, but admitted "I don't know if it will get off the ground."

"The phone question is the big one that has not yet been addressed," said Mac Tichenor, president, TSR. But he said it is time for action. "We should act now and reserve judgment on some of the unanswered questions."

Any recommended methodology would have faults, added Monica Roslow, Conill Advertising's director-research. "Doing research in the Spanish market is never perfect and it never will be. What's important is that it's reliable and that both sides can live with it," she said.

Gaining the endorsement should bring Birch a lot of business. "We've crossed the precipice and now realize the enormity of the market before us," Mr. Birch said.

STATION BREAKS

GALAVISION FACES A BASIC PROBLEM

John Pero seems to like tough sales. He commanded the sales operation of Spanish International Network and Univision when some corporations' attitudes toward Hispanic marketing bordered on contempt.

Just when Univision started to benefit from the market's momentum, Univisa sold it to Hallmark Cards. Mr. Pero remained with Univisa to oversee its Galavision cable network's transition from a pay tier to an ad-supported, basic cable operation.

Ten weeks into that conversion, he uttered the predictable: "Cable in general is tough to sell; selling Spanish cable isn't the easiest thing in the world."

Mr. Pero believes the network can find a place, adding that advertisers are slow to think of Galavision as an ad medium after eight years as a pay service.

"Our concern is the area of coverage," said Publicidad Siboney Media Director Meg Bernot. "They have 25%, Univision has 85%, Telemundo will be up to 75% in 1989. The issue is whether buying a string of low-rated spots on Galavision is worth it."

The continuing addition of Telemundo Group stations in many markets also has hurt Galavision. "Now there are greater out-of-pocket expenses just to cover the two broadcast networks efficiently," Ms. Bernot said.

Mr. Pero has met with some success. Miller Brewing Co. is buying spots on hourly sports updates, and sales are strong in Los Angeles where local coverage is good, he said.

Eduardo del Rivero, VP-account services at Miller agency Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados, said the buy was generated by "a very good deal. We're just testing it to see if it will work."

Galavision is cutting some sweet deals, with :30s going for less than half of the $400 rate, Mr. Pero said. "It's an attractive package and other clients are interested," although he would not specify.

Mr. Pero suggested that when subscriber households reach 3 million—"50% wiring of Hispanic households, same as the general market level"—sales will follow. Galavision currently reaches about 1 million households.

Coverage will jump 50% in the first quarter of 1989, predicted Starrett Berry, Galavision's VP-general manager. "A lot of systems have waited to convert until after the fourth quarter," he said.

Viewer response has been mixed, Mr. Berry admitted. "We're still in a tough transitionary period." Galavision altered its programming from entertainment/variety to news when it converted to basic.

"We had a lot of die-hard film and novela fans," he said. "We're virtually changing audiences entirely." The news format is attracting a younger, male-oriented audience; the viewership previously had skewed toward older women.

Mr. del Rivero said Galavision's male audience was a bonus for Miller, and that "there is a precedent in the general market that a news channel could work well."

However, Galavision executives are reevaluating programming. "If the viewers desire slightly different, more diverse programming we will include it in our menu. We made a drastic change and want to make sure the format will take hold," Mr. Berry said.

Entertainment elements may return to the mix. An increase in first-run sports programming also is being considered.

Adding entertainment shows would put Galavision in direct competition with Spanish-language broadcast networks, Ms. Bernot said. Systems in most major Hispanic markets carry all three networks. "And altering programming doesn't change the fact that it has only 25% coverage."

Larger audiences might result if Galavision can beat Univision and Telemundo at their own programming game. "If they come up with better programming than the traditional fare, they'll get audience because viewers want an alternative," Mr. del Rivero said. Until this happens, "cable will be a marginal player," he added.

"We don't have a physical make-or-break point," Mr. Berry said. "Galavision has been here for nine years and people thought it would be gone by now. There will always be a place for something like this."

PRODUCT AND ACCOUNT ACTIVITY

Hyundai Motor America, which did not have a 1988 U.S. model, stunned the marketplace by grabbing an 8.2% share of 1987 model year sales among Hispanics, according to R.L. Polk & Co.

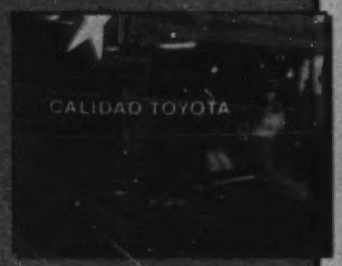
Last month, Hyundai broke Hispanic market TV and radio spots in Miami via Backer Spielvogel Bates. As the numbers show Hyundai has done very well without advertising.

"In most Hispanic areas our penetration has been fantastic by using English-language media," said Joe Corey, national advertising manager. "There is no evidence that adding Hispanic media in markets like Los Angeles or San Antonio would bring us anything."

Miami differs in its media usage. "We've been studying it and our evidence shows that Miami Hispanics watch and listen to Hispanic media (at the exclusion of general market media)," he said, adding that Spanish-language media is receiving 10% to 15% of the local spot budget.

But Hyundai has lots of company. Nissan Motor Co., Hispanic market import leader with a 6.4% share of 1987 sales, launched fourth quarter spots in Miami via Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad.

Toyota Motor Corp., the No. 3 import with a 7.5% share, recently broke a network TV and radio campaign via Conill Advertising, representing the most aggressive import advertising to Hispanics. Toyota also is running heavy local campaigns in eight markets.



Not only is it the fastest growing consumer segment, "but in terms of percentages, Hispanics are moving into the affluent segments at a faster rate than any other segment," said George Borst, Toyota's national ad manager. "Of course, they're starting from a small base, but we really see them as a dynamic, loyalty-driven consumer force."

Despite the upsurge in ad efforts, Mr. Borst said the imports did well among Hispanics because of population concentrations. "We would get a disproportionate share anyway because the Hispanic population is located in our strong sales areas."

- HBO assigned advertising of its "Spanish-enhanced project" to Publicidad Siboney. In January selected HBO and Cinemax programs will be aired in Spanish via second audio programming.
- R.J. Reynolds Tobacco USA to Bravo Group as first Hispanic agency of record. Bravo reportedly will focus initially on Camel filter cigarettes.
- Certified Grocers of California to Castellanos Latina for its Golden Creme dairy line as first Hispanic agency of record. Also to Castellanos, National Home Shopper's distributor recruitment and image advertising. Both multi-media accounts carry $750,000 budget.
- After testing in San Antonio and Los Angeles, Quaker Oats Co. has rolled TV and radio spots for Gatorade thirst quencher nationally. Berry-Brown Advertising handles.

- Procter & Gamble Co.'s Ivory and Camay to Conill Advertising, which also was named first Hispanic agency of record for Helene Curtis Industries. Inaugural Finesse spots are breaking in San Francisco and Miami.
- Roundup: Zebbies Inc. to Marketing Mercadeo International as first Hispanic agency of record. Spice marketer Bekal Products Co. to Fernandez Barsdat/JGR & Associates. Highland Superstores' is breaking initial Hispanic market TV campaign, featuring comedian Paul Rodriguez, via W.B. Doner & Co. General Mills and Circus Vargas have created a $300,000 proof-of-purchase promotion. GTE California via Sosa & Associates will spend $1 million in November and December on inaugural Hispanic ads.

LOYALTY BORDERS ON IMMIGRATION

To successfully crack the U.S. Hispanic market a product may do well to imitate part of its target market and enter El Norte via a Rio Grande crossing.

What has long been assumed to be a cultural tendency toward brand loyalty is often brand awareness built in Latin America, transferred to the U.S. via immigrants and perpetuated by minimal advertising of competing products here.

"No real cultural principle accounts for this. In the absence of a cultural argument, it has to do with the marketing environment," said Roger Sennot, general manager, Market Development Inc.

Fitch

Many products' high sales among U.S. Hispanics result from aggressive Latin American advertising, said Rolando Wejc, VP-account director at Leo Burnett Co. and formerly exec VP, director-client services at Leo Burnett Venezuela, C.A. "It's simply loyalty to the brands they know best," he said.

At stake is a sizable portion of the market. U.S. Census Bureau figures estimate that immigrants account for 50% of U.S. Hispanic population growth. The numbers likely are much higher, taking into account the undocumented.

Companies with strong general-market campaigns cannot expect to reach this sizable segment.

"The newcomer who functions primarily in Spanish will not have the same information imparted to him by companies because general-market efforts often are not duplicated in the Hispanic market," said Joe Albonetti, VP-executive director of Tinsley Advertising's Conceptos International.

Not surprisingly, the so-called brand loyalty is greatest among foreign-born, Spanish-dominant consumers. But when they are exposed to advertising via Spanish-language media, brand loyalty dissipates, which explains another market truism: Hispanics will try new products.

"The two behaviors are a result of the same thing," Mr. Sennot said. "A good [U.S. Hispanic market] campaign will drive Latin American brand loyalty away in no time."

So what's a company to do? "Take care of those people who've taken care of it," said Herney Nisimblat, director-Hispanic marketing, Colgate-Palmolive.

Colgate toothpaste has more than 80% share of the Latin American market and about 65% share of the U.S. Hispanic market. "If we don't continue to talk to them here and continue our efforts, we would not enjoy that," he said. Loyalty must be refreshed through advertising, couponing, sampling, community events and promotions, "or they'll forget about you."

The brand with the lower Latin American share has but one choice. "You certainly need a bigger effort if they don't bring product awareness with them," said Mr. Wejc.

The marketing principle is universal: The more media and advertising exposure, the more awareness and trial. "If we weren't talking about Hispanic market behavior the air of mystery would be dispelled," Mr. Sennot said.

Many don't dismiss a cultural factor, however. "The psychographics have to be considered"; Hispanics are more conservative and less prone to switching brands, said Mr. Nisimblat.

Again, the specific marketing environment dictates tactics. "Trial occurs in the less brand-name conscious categories," said Ricardo Amundsen-Bueno, president of his own marketing consultancy. Beer will carry more brand loyalty than tissue; "things that say, 'I'm this kind of guy,' vs. those that don't."

Brand loyalty is destined to become less of a given as Hispanic marketing becomes more competitive. "As the noise level and the information provided increase, no one can assume Hispanics will remain loyal," Mr. Albonetti said.

Future acculturation and immigration patterns also may lessen the impact. "For the first generation Hispanic, it helps a lot. What happens next depends on a lot of variables," Mr. Wejc said.

As more U.S. Hispanics are born north of the Rio Grande, brand loyalties will swing to those products that also are nurtured primarily in the U.S. Hispanic market.

■ Next year's activity should be a good gauge of Hispanic marketing's relative importance. When total budgets are tight—as they are expected to be next year—segment marketing historically has been pared in favor of other programs.

"We don't expect cutbacks on our side," said Eduardo del Rivero, VP-account services, of Hispanic shop Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados. "It's finally at the point where clients are realizing it's not just an opportunity, but a necessity."

Contributing to this awareness is stagnant general-market performance. "As brands mature in the general market, marketing managers are realizing there is real additional business potential in the Hispanic market," he said.

Carlos Rossi, ceo of No. 2 Hispanic shop Conill Advertising, said in general clients are investing more. "But when you look specifically, growth is coming mostly from those clients that are already committed and are now moving forward at a faster pace." Those companies are not necessarily the largest, he said, but those with the most analytical marketing strategies.

The boom abates

Hispanic market expenditures ($000,000 and % change)

1988	$550.1	12.1%
1987	490.7	23.3
1986	398.0	19.3
1985	333.5	17.2
1984	284.5	26.8

Source: Hispanic Business

"Still Hispanic marketing is one of the first areas to get cut," Mr. Rossi said. One positive change he noted is that some companies—even those that are cutting back—are devoting a greater proportion of their budgets to Hispanic marketing.

Improving performance next year may be relatively easy. Growth in 1988 Hispanic marketing expenditures is the lowest of the decade. Total market expenditures will rise 12.1% to $550.1 million, far off the 23.3% pace set last year, according to Hispanic Business. An additional $59.4 million was funneled into the market this year compared with a $92.7 million surge in 1987.

With some exceptions, leading Hispanic market advertisers did not bump up 1988 budgets substantially. In economically suspect times, further growth seems increasingly to hinge on bringing new advertisers into the market.

BK's Lavely may be out

MIAMI—Burger King early this week is expected to announce the possible departure of Exec VP-Marketing Anthony Lavely, sources close to the company said. Franchisees' complaints about Burger King's response to their marketing problems led to the move, sources said. Mr. Lavely, 45, has been the chief proponent of replacing N W Ayer, New York, on Burger King's $200 million account, so his departure is viewed as a positive sign for the agency. His close ties to Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, from his days as senior VP-marketing at Jerrico, led to speculation that FCB would soon wrest the account from Ayer (AA, Nov. 21). Mr. Lavely's possible replacement couldn't be determined; a company spokeswoman wouldn't confirm or deny the report.

RJR's brands: Bidding begins

An Advertising Age roundup

The auction of RJR Nabisco has only just begun, and with it could come plummeting ad budgets and the cancellation of new products—among them, sources predict, the controversial Premier "smokeless" cigarette.

Procter & Gamble Co., Ralston Purina Co., Quaker Oats Co., Nestle SA and others are lining up to grab such brands as Planters, Del Monte, Fleischmann's and Milk Bone.

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., which emerged the victor in a bloody battle for the food and tobacco giant, said it plans to sell off at least $5 billion in blue-chip brands.

Last week, Kohlberg Kravis won a bidding war by agreeing to pay a record $25 billion in a leveraged buyout for the marketer of such well-known brands as Oreo cookies and Winston cigarettes.

Of the brands that will remain under Kohlberg Kravis—believed to include the cookie/cracker and the cash-rich tobacco businesses—there likely will be massive advertising cuts to service debt from the mammoth transaction.

RJR Nabisco ranked No. 5 among ADVERTISING AGE Leading National Advertisers with 1987 ad spending of $639.6 million.

"The extraordinary irony is we've never had such proof of the value of brands, but the problem with an LBO is that the brands they paid tremendous money for are going to be starved [in terms of ad support] to service the debt," a source close to RJR Nabisco said.

In fact, observers said tobacco ad spending in general is set to take a nose dive.

"Between RJR Nabisco and Philip Morris [acquiring Kraft for $13 billion], it's safe to say ad expenditures in the tobacco industry will be coming down,"

Saatchi has advertisers' eye

By THOMAS J. TYRER

Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, which has quickly seized a sizable portion of U.S. ad spending, is beginning to score big in advertisers' share of mind as well.

According to Agency Watch, ADVERTISING AGE's quarterly survey of company advertising directors, Saatchi now ranks second only to J. Walter Thompson Co. in top-of-mind awareness.

In the latest Agency Watch survey, conducted during the third quarter this year, 12% of the 300 advertising executives polled answered Saatchi when asked which agency first came to mind. That was Saatchi's highest score yet for that question and gave the agency the No. 2 spot for the second straight quarter.

JWT, which has dominated the awareness category since Agency Watch began in the fourth quarter of 1984, was named the agency that first comes to mind by 23.4% of the respondents.

Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide was third with a score of 11.7%, followed by Young & Rubicam with 9% and BBDO Worldwide with 8.4%.

Saatchi's rise to the ranks of agencies that company ad executives consider the country's best is equally impressive.

In the latest survey, 3% of those surveyed said Saatchi was the best overall agency in the country, tying it for fourth place with Foote, Cone & Belding Communications.

That's the first time Saatchi has cracked Agency Watch's top five "best" agencies. Saatchi entered the U.S. in 1982 and in 1987 reported gross U.S. billings of $2.19 billion.

Ranking ahead of Saatchi and FCB as best overall agencies were JWT, No. 1 with a score of 7%; O&M, 4.4%; and Y&R, 3.7%.

JWT's score marks a rebound from its slump to 3.3% in the second quarter (AA, Aug. 15).

O&M, on the other hand, recorded its lowest best-agency score yet.

O&M and JWT have held the survey's No. 1 and No. 2 positions in every quarter.

Saatchi also scored well in other areas. It was named the country's hottest agency by 4.4% of those questioned, which tied it for second in that category with Chiat/Day.

Hal Riney & Partners extended its streak as the hottest agency to a full year with a score of 5.4%.

Although it didn't rank higher than fifth in any of the six specific agency attributes monitored by Agency Watch, Saatchi tied or topped its previous best scores for those attributes.

The agency's best showings were in top management, where it was No. 5 with a score of 2.7%, and in marketing and account executives, in each of which it tied

NBC to cut Olympic clutter

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—NBC-TV might have fewer commercials in its 1992 telecast of the Summer Olympics following widespread criticism among viewers and advertisers that ad "clutter" in the 1988 Games resulted in lower-than-expected ratings.

In announcing NBC's record-breaking winning $401 million bid to telecast the '92 Summer Games, NBC President Robert Wright said the network had "learned" from its experience in Seoul, the site of the 1988 Summer Games.

The bid for the '92 Games in Barcelona, Spain, is up 33.7% over the '88 bid of about $300 million.

"We made mistakes [with the production], we learned a lot and we will try to minimize the commercial load," Mr. Wright said. The network would "certainly" not run any more commercial time, but it likely would have fewer commercials every hour, he added.

R. Wright

Constricting the commercial load hypothetically leads to higher commercial rates, but Mr. Wright said the network intends to limit advertiser costs. He said costs would parallel the rate of inflation over the next four years of about 5% to 6% annually.

During the Seoul Games, advertisers paid NBC as much as $300,000 per 30-second spot.

"Even if [NBC] kept the commercial load the same, and the rights are up roughly 30%, and NBC had priced [Seoul] out at as much as $330,000 [per :30], then it seems they'd have to get at least $400,000 a :30," said Lou Schultz, exec VP at Lintas:USA.

During the 1988 Summer Games, NBC ran about 9 minutes an hour of commercials during the Olympics, or 2 minutes more than the typical prime-time load.

Grey Advertising estimated there may have been as much as 15 minutes per hour of "non-program" time, which includes promos, local ads, news bumpers and network commercials.

Critics contended the clutter, among other factors, contributed to lower ratings. NBC averaged just over a 17 rating from A.C. Nielsen Co., or 4 rating points below estimates.

Even with a lower commercial load, NBC won't be forced to pass on the entire cost of its record bid to advertisers. Because of the structure of the deal, Mr. Wright said, he expected affiliates to help shoulder the cost of the telecast, though details haven't been worked out.

In addition, he said cable TV would be part of the deal. NBC is expected to sell broadcast rights of some events to cable networks, while other events would be shown on CNBC, NBC's new cable network.

Steve Leff, vice chairman of Backer Spielvogel Bates, said that both NBC and CBS, broadcaster of the 1992 Winter Games, will try to clean up their broadcasts and "sell them on a higher plane. They can dress them up, provide all sorts of promotional opportunities to advertisers and reduce the appearance of clutter."#

USAir directs Piedmont ads to land at EPB

By JANET MEYERS

A year after acquiring Piedmont Airlines, USAir has awarded the combined $60 million ad account to Earle Palmer Brown Cos., bidding farewell to longtime Piedmont shop McKinney & Silver.

By next June, the Piedmont name will also be grounded as that carrier is fully merged into USAir.

Last week, the company ran the first joint ad for USAir and Piedmont. Appearing in the Washington Post, it touted the flights both Piedmont and USAir offered to the Midwest. Bethesda, Md.-based EPB created the ad.

USAir's advertising philosophy is radically different from Piedmont's.

Ed Colodny, USAir chairman, favors price-oriented rather than image ads, while Piedmont traditionally spent almost twice as much on advertising as USAir and stressed both image and price.

Piedmont's account last year was close to $40 million, but that has dropped to about $30 million this year because the airline has discontinued image campaigns in the wake of its sale to USAir.

Former "M*A*S*H" TV series star McLean Stevenson is Piedmont's celebrity spokesman.

McKinney President Bob Doherty said Piedmont now represents about 25% of the Raleigh, N.C., agency's billings of $120 million. It landed the Southern carrier in 1979, when it was spending only $6 million on advertising.

PSA group linked to founder of 'est'

By SCOTT HUME

CHICAGO—The Chicago chapter of Ad*Net, a national group that develops public service advertising for non-profit organizations, is said to have strong but hidden ties with the founder of "est" self-help seminars.

Two board members have resigned, and one member of a separate "advisory" board, Rance Crain, editor in chief of ADVERTISING AGE, also resigned last week.

In a column in Crain's Chicago Business, a sister publication of AD AGE, Mr. Crain said he resigned after members complained they have been heavily recruited by other Ad*Net members to attend The Forum, a for-profit organization run by Werner Erhard & Associates (best known for the "est" seminars).

Mr. Crain said that Ad*Net—which also has chapters in New York and Detroit—has "done several worthwhile projects."

But he said he learned from Ad*Net insiders that "at least two recent prospective not-for-profit clients of Ad*Net—the Chicago Hunger Campaign and Youth-at-Risk—are Erhard enterprises."

In one letter of resignation, an Ad*Net board member wrote, "It is a disservice to the entire membership when our group is being used as a source for new 'participants.' Though I hope it is not true, it appears that Ad*Net Chicago's first agenda is to sell Werner Erhard & Associates." The board member declined to be identified.

In another resignation letter, a board member wrote, "I feel that an [Ad*Net] orientation toward any for-profit group is a conflict of interest with Ad*Net's not-for-profit status. . . .

"I found it appalling that [my objection] was answered with a profane emotional outburst from the president of Ad*Net. . . . That incident finalized my decision." He also declined to be identified.

Barbara J. Carr, New York-based president of Ad*Net, confirmed that two of the seven board members for the Chicago chapter have resigned, but she said she wasn't aware of the reasons they'd given. John Davidoff, president of Ad*Net/Chicago, couldn't be reached for comment.

Mr. Crain said that Mr. Davidoff

Premiums on :15s attacked

Upset marketers see trend

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Major advertisers are afraid network premiums for 15-second TV spots in sports and other special programming will spread.

"We're very concerned," said Greg Lincoln, media director for Pillsbury U.S. Foods, a major user of 15-second commercials that plans to introduce two products soon via :15s.

Michael Moors, director of advertising media at K mart Corp., the No. 2 retailer, said K mart would consider dropping :15s if the prices rise too sharply. K mart is a heavy user of 15-second spots.

"I'd find it hard to understand the justification" for premiums, Mr. Moors said. K mart "will have to completely rethink [its] media execution if rates become out of line."

Mr. Moors thinks the recent moves are "part of the overall situation of network TV advertising and [the networks'] decreasing viewer ratings. They're just trying to squeeze a few more dollars out of everything they get."

While major marketers are expected to battle premiums placed on the shorter units, many believe the higher prices ultimately will hurt smaller, or single-brand, advertisers, some of which have launched entire campaigns based on :15s.

That's because these advertisers usually buy the :15s as a standalone unit, rather than as a split 30—a regular 30-second unit within which the advertisers place two short spots. Major package-goods marketers are the most frequent buyers of split 30s, using them to match brands within the unit.

In most instances, the networks charge half the cost of a :30 for a solo :15. But CBS-TV said it would start charging premiums for solo :15s in sports programs (AA, Nov. 28), while ABC has already started charging premiums for solos in "NFL Monday Night Football."

CBS said there were no plans for premiums on :15s in other dayparts.

Carnation Co., which has come to rely more heavily on :15s in recent months, said, "We would become concerned if the precedent becomes established and is carried over into other programming. If they put a premium price on the 15-second spot, it becomes less attractive than it is. If they boosted the price, we

Big shops continue to pare their ad jobs

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—This year is winding up like 1987—another string of months in which total advertising job counts at the nation's 10 largest agencies dwindled.

As a group, the agencies sheared 237 jobs from their rolls in the March-to-November period, according to the latest ADVERTISING AGE employment survey. Total advertising employment at those agencies fell to 20,345, off 1.2% from last spring.

The tally counts professional and support positions directly involved in advertising activity. Recruitment, public relations and other ancillary units aren't included.

Between March and November, seven of the top 10 shops cut staffs by anywhere from 0.9% to 6.4%,

Santa Claus looks like his old familiar self in a 1932 ad for Coca-Cola (top). But by 1985, the Galleria mall had him pretty punked out (bottom l.)—and now we've got Crazy Eddie's infamous spokesman, Jerry Carroll, doing a baldfaced impersonation.

The clever elves of adland make Santa top pitchman

By BETSY SPETHMANN

He may be the most popular spokesman ever, despite his weight problem and limited wardrobe.

"If you're going to use Santa, you'd better do it well. It's such a cliche, it had better be different," said Nick Gisonde, exec VP and co-creative director at Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York.

The standard has been set by Coca-Cola Co., featuring the old guy in Christmas advertising since the 1930s. In 1931, it commissioned artist Haddon Sundblom to paint his first portrait of Santa. His paintings of St. Nick in different poses, often with children, dominated the company's holiday advertising for more than three decades.

This year, Coca-Cola Co. and Rich's department stores in Atlanta are selling a stuffed doll modeled after the Santa Mr. Sundblom created (AA, Nov. 28).

Fat and full-size—much bigger than the elf suggested in Clement Moore's 1822 poem, " 'Twas the Night Before Christmas"—the Sundblom Santa formed Americans' perception of the big guy.

Since the 1960s, however, Santa has strayed from drinking Coke—he sipped Schweppes soft drinks in 1981, 7UP in 1984 and hot cocoa with NutraSweet in 1986.

Still, he can't slake his thirst with just anything, especially in Ohio, where state liquor laws prohibit Santa from appearing in beer ads.

Holiday retail sales starting to move up—P. 64

Last year, Anheuser-Busch got coal in its stocking for in-store displays that featured Bud Lite spokesdog Spuds MacKenzie in a Santa-like cap and jacket; the state banned the displays.

The state's adamance shows how seriously consumers (and most advertisers) take Santa's image, one perpetuated by age-old legends. Consider how advertising furthers these favorite Santa Claus myths:

• Santa is the patron saint of children.

Ranking of global marketing/advertising/public opinion research industry shows domination by merger and acquisition activity

By Jack J. Honomichl

At the ESOMAR Congress in Lisbon last September, Philip Barnard, chairman of Research International-UK, the Ogilvy Group subsidiary, presented an update on the estimated size of the world market for marketing/advertising/public opinion research which, for 1987, he put at $4.7 billion.

Given all the merger and acquisition activity in recent years, it should be no surprise to learn there now is a concentration of ownership in the industry; the 25 largest worldwide research organizations alone, profiled here for the first time, have 1987 revenues of $2.564 billion, or about 54.6% of the world total.

These companies—with headquarters from London to Lincoln, Neb., from Tokyo to Liechtenstein—through acquisitions, joint ventures, less-than-majority equity interests and licensing agreements, have woven a truly international industry which is mingling more and more as time goes on.

The Top 25 company profiles document these sprawling organizations, their ownership, relationships with other research companies and major services—as well as major moves to date.

Today, if there is a research capital of the world, it is London. The dominant player on the world is Dun & Bradstreet Corp., New York, which has about a 22.6% of the world market through acquisition of the A.C. Nielsen Co. and IMS International. (Runner-up is Control Data Corp., Minneapolis, with a 6.9% share.)

Of the Top 25's aggregate revenues of $2.564 billion, 74% are controlled by 12 organizations, which in turn are subsidiaries of large non-research corporations including WPP Group, the Ogilvy Group, Maritz Inc., Daily Mail and General Trust, Equifax and Addison Consultancy Group—in addition, of course, to D&B and Control Data.

Only four of the Top 25 are still privately held, and they account for just 6% of the $2.564 billion. But be cautioned: Hard data are hard to come by for several reasons.

One is that the financials of 12 of the Top 25 are buried in the revenues of their non-research corporate parents. Another is currency relationships, which have fluctuated significantly over the past 18 months, especially the relationship of the U.S. dollar to foreign currencies including the British pound, German deutschmark and Japanese yen.

Jack J. Honomichl covers the research industry and writes a monthly column for ADVERTISING AGE.

©1987 The Stock Market/Meg Shea

When worldwide revenues are put onto a common U.S. dollar basis, as has been done here, these variations make precise conversions difficult. For this report, average conversion rates for 1987 are used. But overall, the declining value of the American dollar has tended to make foreign research companies loom relatively large, and U.S.-only organizations to shrink in relative size and ranking. If we used today's conversion rates, it would make a significant difference in revenues for some companies.

However, through various sources—such as the ESOMAR Directory of member companies; the public reports of the Association of Market Survey Organizations (AMSO) in the U.K.; the SOGO Reports in Japan and the writings of Thomas Marcotty in West Germany; plus much-appreciated assists from Mr. Barnard of Research International; William "Jay" Wilson, president of Starch INRA Hooper and Masanobu Ishikawa, president of Video Research—profiles and revenue estimates for the Top 25 have been developed with workable accuracy.

(If a Top 25 company made a 1988 acquisition, 1987 revenues of the acquired company were added to its revenues.)

Still, there is one possible omission of consequence: the SEMA Metra Group in France, a public company that owns, among many other things, SOFRES, the third-largest research company (after Nielsen and SECODIP) in France, with annual revenues estimated at $22 million. In addition, SEMA has equity interests in Sobemap in Belgium and SOFEMAS in Spain. Documenting the research revenues of the three SEMA companies is the problem, and they could exceed $24.5 million and justify a place on the Top 25 list.

The 25 largest marketing/advertising/public opinion research organizations in the world, per 1987 revenues (plus acquisitions in 1988), follow:

5 Arbitron Ratings Co.

This New York-based organization, acquired by Control Data Corp., Minneapolis, in 1967, has 1,670 full-time employees and in 1987 had revenues estimated at $155 million. (This does not include the estimated $32 million revenues of Broadcast Advertiser Reports, the largest TV commercial monitoring service, and Radio-TV Reports, which Arbitron acquired in 1987.)

The main business of Arbitron is local market TV, cable and radio audience measurement services, which are syndicated. For radio, 259 markets are measured periodically and 79 year-round, via mail diaries. For TV, Arbitron measures 213 markets (ADIs), 13 of which are measured by a combination of meter panels and diaries. 10 Video Research

This company, which started in 1962 as a TV audience measurement service, now has a variety of research services and annual revenues of $65.8 million, all in Japan.

Originally funded by Dentsu Inc., the giant Japanese advertising agency that still owns 36% of VR's stock, VR has 24 corporate stockholders, mostly broadcasting companies and ad agencies, plus Toshiba Inc. (In addition to its stake in VR, Dentsu also owns Dentsu Research, the fourth-largest Japanese research company, with annual revenues of about $120 million.)

Today VR, in addition to TV meter panels for audience ratings, conducts radio audience research, public opinion surveys, new product development studies, ad effectiveness and creativity studies, company image surveys and sales promotion effectiveness studies. Most clients are advertising agencies and TV stations.

VR operates a single-source test marketing system, VR homeScan, which relates TV viewing to product purchasing with a UPC scanner used in-home to record product purchases.

VR has seven branch offices in Japan and 264 employees. President is Masanobu Ishikawa, 61.

11 WESTAT Inc.

This organization, which is headquartered in Rockville, Md., is an employee-owned corporation with almost all of its 520 full-time employees holding shares.

WESTAT, founded in 1961, is unique in that almost all its survey work is for agencies of the federal government, and in a given year there are about 320 projects, some of which span two or more years. (For instance, a current project is the National Medical Expenditures Survey sponsored by the Department of Health & Human Services on which WESTAT is prime contractor.)

Revenues in 1987 were $61.3 million, including those of a subsidiary, Crossley Surveys, New York, which WESTAT acquired in 1983.

Data collection is through a central telephone interviewing facility (104 stations) in Rockville, plus door-to-door, most of which moves through WESTAT's 12 field supervisor offices and an interviewing staff of 270, most of whom work only for WESTAT.

President-CEO is Joseph A. Hunt, 52, and Edward C. Bryant, 72, a founder of the company, is chairman emeritus.

Dow Spiffits cleaners court working women

By LAURIE FREEMAN

DowBrands is betting $18 million on a new product aimed at making next year's spring cleaning chores easier.

The division of Dow Chemical Co., formerly known as Texize, will introduce nationally Spiffits, five household-cleaning products that combine cleaners with disposable cloth towels.

"The core of the concept is one-step cleaning," said Susan Crow, group product development manager. "It's particularly relevant for today's working women who have less time to clean and are willing to pay a premium for convenience."

In the $18 million campaign, created by Henderson Advertising, Greenville, S.C., a 45-second umbrella spot introduces the entire family of Spiffits: a soft scouring cleanser, glass cleaner, furniture polish/cleaner, multipurpose cleaner, and bathroom cleaner.

Five 15-second spots each feature a different Spiffits variety.

The national TV campaign, which breaks in May, will be supported through the summer by print ads, couponing and sampling. Spiffits will ship to retailers in March.

While "convenience cleaning" has been a buzz word among household-cleaning product marketers for most of the 1980s, few new products have met consumers' desire to give the house a quick once-over.

Trade materials say Spiffits, priced at about $2.50, will single-handedly create a $100 million cleaning category for moist towels.

Working women, who comprise more than 53% of the nation's work force, have less time to spend cleaning and each year appear less inclined to devote leisure time to clean the house (AA, April 4).

As a result, sales of household cleaners have declined. The category posted sales of $581 million last year, down 0.3% from 1985, while volume dropped 5% to 460 million units, according to SAMI/Burke.

The closest competitor to Spiffits is Once Overs, a disposable bathroom cleaning towel that Kimberly-Clark Corp. has been testing since October 1987 (AA, Oct. 5, et seq.).#

while three others increased their head counts by 1.9% to 4.9%.

In two previous surveys, covering the November 1987-to-March 1988 period and the January 1987-to-November 1987 period, seven of the top 10 also reported cutbacks. While gains came mainly from new business, cutbacks tended to stem from belt-tightening measures, not merely lost accounts.

The new results mark a continuation of the slow downward trend of the past two years. From November 1987 to last March, the count dropped 3%.

Rankings compared with those compiled in March showed J. Walter Thompson USA moving to fifth place from sixth in total advertising employment, switching spots with Grey Advertising, on the strength of 92 jobs added from several new-business gains during 1988. That brought JWT's total to 1,996.

The new JWT figure, representing the largest single hiring increase among the top shops in the March-to-November period, still remains lower than the agency's job count of 2,200 in January 1987, when JWT still handled the $200 million Burger King Corp. account. The Burger King loss prompted a series of layoffs at the agency.

The only other gainers among the 10 largest employers were No. 4 Leo Burnett USA, up 4.1% on the strength of new-business wins, and No. 7 McCann-Erickson Worldwide, up 1.9%. Both Burnett and McCann reported gains in the November 1987-to-March survey periods as well.

Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, following cost-cutting measures imposed with its leveraged buyout this year from Lorimar Telepictures Corp., dropped from eighth to 10th place, losing 112 jobs, or 6.4% of its work force. That was the biggest change among the top 10 agencies.

As a result, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising and D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles moved up a notch, to eighth and ninth place, respectively. Saatchi's employee total was down due to the loss of $80 million in RJR Nabisco business, much of which went to No. 2 Foote, Cone & Belding. That agency nonetheless reported a 0.9% employment drop.

For the Record

JOS. E. SEAGRAM & SONS' elimination of half of its product line probably won't affect its ad agency lineup, a company spokesman said. Seagram's agencies are Ogilvy & Mather; DDB Needham Worldwide; Wells, Rich, Greene; and Pedone & Partners, all New York. Seagram last week announced that it's stopping production of two brands, giving up marketing rights to four brands, and will sell 18 others. The move is part of a larger industry trend to concentrate on premium spirits with high margins. Industry observers speculate a smaller company specializing in price brands or a foreign concern might buy some of the largely unadvertised brands.

KIDDER, PEABODY & CO., New York, is reviewing seven agencies for its consolidated $5 million corporate and national sales accounts. Doremus & Co., which currently handles corporate, and Margeotes/Fertitta & Weiss, which does national sales, are in the review. Ammirati & Puris; Grace & Rothschild; Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos; and Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners also will take part.

MFI FURNITURE GROUP, London, added Geers Gross to its agency roster. Geers Gross will handle TV, color print media buying and Hygena furniture. Incumbent Brunning Group, which previously had handled MFI's entire $14 million account, will keep b&w print advertising.

THE CHICKEN WARS are still cooking. A. Copeland Enterprises, parent of Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken & Biscuits, extended until Dec. 16 its $8-a-share tender offer for Church's Fried Chicken. As of Nov. 30, 40% of Church's 36.6 million outstanding shares had been tendered. Church's says it's begun discussions with unnamed third parties. Separately, Holly Farms Corp. said its board will meet to consider a cash tender offer of $54 per share from Tyson Foods. The Tyson offer expires Dec. 16. Holly Farms already has agreed to be bought by ConAgra in a friendly stock swap that's valued at between $55 and $58 a share, or about $995 million. Tyson is challenging the Holly Farms-ConAgra deal in court.

THE U.S.S.R. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE & INDUSTRY is spending $600,000 for three weeks of print ads for the first Soviet Export Goods Exhibition, to be held Dec. 8 to 20 in New York. V/O Vneshtorgreklama, Moscow, created the ads.

CONTINENTAL AIRLINES last week set off a limited round of fare wars aimed at leisure travelers to Florida. A $2 million print and TV campaign from N W Ayer, Houston and New York, is themed "Hot fun in the wintertime."

NEW CAMPAIGNS: Eastman Kodak Co. on Dec. 3 broke three new 30-second network TV spots featuring Bill Cosby for its Colorwatch film processing system. Print supports. J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, handles. . . . Barton Beers and Gambrinus Importing Co. have kicked off the first holiday TV commercial for Corona Extra beer, via Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Chicago. . . . Procter & Gamble Co. has begun a TV campaign for Crest tartar-control toothpaste, featuring celebrity spokeswoman Lena Horne. D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York, is the agency.

ACCOUNT ACTIVITY: Washington Dairy Products Commission, Seattle, narrowed contenders for its $4.2 million account to incumbent Ehrig & Associates and Elgin Syferd. . . . First Bank System, Minneapolis, is reviewing agencies for its estimated $2 million Twin Cities consumer banks account, sources say. Carmichael Lynch resigned the account in September and declined to join the review. . . . Zebco, Tulsa, Okla., to Carmichael Lynch, Minneapolis, from Ackerman, Hood & McQueen, Tulsa, for its $5 million-plus fishing equipment account.

WORTH NOTING: Omnicom Group, New York, bought the Schechter Group, a design company that will become part of Omnicom's Diversified Agency Services unit. . . . Ramey Communications and Ruud & Partners, both Los Angeles, will merge Jan. 1 to create Ramey Ruud & Partners. . . . Heublein added Dennis Miller of NBC-TV's "Saturday Night Live" to its Jose Cuervo tequila campaign via Young & Rubicam, New York. . . . Maserati Automobiles is sponsoring the launch of the paperback novel "Power City" by BethAnn Herman, which extols the Italian import's virtues in an expose about the Hollywood public relations business. The Martin Agency, Richmond, Va., handles Maserati. . . . Eveready Battery Co. will buy COFINEA, France's top battery marketer.

Premiums for :15s may fight clutter

would have to make our search for alternative media even more accelerated [than it already is]. Network prices have gone up so much more . . . than food prices; we can't sustain further price increases."

"It will be an uphill battle" for the networks, said Chuck Lanphear, media director of Heinz USA. Nearly 40% of his company's commercial units are :15s.

"With ratings declines, the networks are not selling the most attractive vehicle," he said. "Although advertiser demand is still relatively strong, so they've still got a card to play."

Mr. Lanphear added that unless "all three networks ask for a premium at the same time, it's not likely to happen."

Nevertheless, Mr. Lanphear and others believe some form of premium is inevitable.

"The real question is where it will all net out," he said. "This is strictly a guess, but I think premiums will be modest—maybe 55% the cost of a :30—although the networks will start out asking 70% because many people judge the effectiveness of :15s" to be 70% that of a :30.

Ace Hardware Corp. is likely to feel particularly pinched by CBS' decision. Its latest campaign—again featuring John Madden—will break at Christmas, and all the spots are :15s scheduled mostly for sports.

"If [networks] put a premium price on the 15-second spot, it becomes less attractive. . . ."

So far, the company hasn't assessed the impact of the price increases. Art Pierson, principal and creative director for Ace's agency, Pierson & Flynn, Chicago, said it's "just too early to tell" what the impact will be.

Other advertisers said the move to premiums, while of concern, was secondary to the problem of increased clutter that :15s have posed. Commercial cluster "overload" is of greater concern to advertisers than a price increase, said a media director for a major package-goods company who asked not to be identified.

"The amount of minutes devoted to commercials hasn't increased, but it seems like it has when you're running more and more :15s within a pod," he said. "Everyone's concerned about pod overload. This will come back to haunt everybody."

He said he wasn't convinced higher prices for :15s will do much to solve clutter.

Jay Kuhnie, national ad manager for Chrysler Corp.'s Dodge, said the :15s have "added to the clutter and have helped push consumers into zapping" past commercials.

Robert Bolte, director of media services at Clorox Co., said the move to charge premiums for :15s "doesn't surprise me whatsoever."

Because the networks are limiting the supply of available 15-second slots—there's a limit of five commercial messages per pod—and because advertiser demand is strong, the networks can charge a premium and get it, he said.

"It's expected," he said. "We don't like it, but it's a free marketplace."

If the economy remains strong, Mr. Bolte said, and if demand for the :15s remains high while network and agency concern about clutter continues, then premiums will become a part of doing business.#

100 OF THE BEST AND BRIGHTEST WOMEN IN ADVERTISING/ MARKETING

Louise McNamee, president-chief operating officer of Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, saw her name added to the agency's title during 1988.

By Merle Kingman and Pat Sloan

Women have come a long way in the advertising business, but many realize how much farther as a group they have to go.

Louise McNamee got her name on the door at Jerry Della Femina's agency, now Della Femina, McNamee WCRS; Marcella Rosen earned a seat on the board of N W Ayer. Jane Newman stepped into the president's shoes at Chiat/Day, New York, while Mary Moore left Boston and what was HBM/Creamer to join Wells, Rich, Greene as vice-chairman.

"I think women are gaining the critical mass in advertising," says agency executive Laurel Cutler, but just wait. "Women are going to be just as strong in five to 10 years as men are now," she ventures.

As vice-chairman/director of marketing planning at FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, Ms. Cutler made news this year by adding the title of VP-consumer affairs at Chrysler Corp.

An accredited reader of tea leaves, Ms. Cutler also is among ADVERTISING AGE's 100 Best and Brightest Women. The Top 100 include 23 agency presidents, ceos, chairs, vice-chairs, co-founders or board members.

Some observers even go beyond Ms. Cutler's prediction and hold that women will not only achieve parity but will dominate the ad industry.

In "The Best Companies for Women," published this year by Simon & Schuster, Grey Advertising VP Jan Dorbis observed that women in their mid-30s are "ready to roll" and that "the real drama is going to come in the next 10 years."

Still, Ms. Dorbis wonders: "Are women actually going to be promoted to the highest levels?"

Barbara Kurka, Grey's director of personnel planning, is certain of the answer. "Ten years from now, advertising will be run by women," she states in the book.

Not all of AD AGE's 100 Best would agree with that. They generally took the view that power will be more evenly distributed, though not without a great deal of effort.

ADVERTISING HALL of FAME

Industry pays honor to 3 giants

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Sidney R. Bernstein, former editor and publisher of ADVERTISING AGE; the late Robert V. Goldstein, VP-advertising, Procter & Gamble Co.; and the late Ray Kroc, founder of McDonald's Corp., were elected last week to the Advertising Hall of Fame. The Hall of Fame, administered by the American Advertising Federation, is an all-industry honor for those people whose career contributions are especially significant.

The hall's 36-member Council of Judges initially chose 44 nominees; 22 judges made the final selections from a list of 20.

RAY KROC

SID BERNSTEIN

ROBERT GOLDSTEIN

For Mr. Bernstein, the honor represents the capstone to a 65-year career in which he continually emphasized the importance of advertising to the U.S. economy.

Mr. Bernstein has been with AA since its birth in 1930. He became managing editor in 1932 and editor in 1938, where he remained until 1957 when he moved to editorial director and subsequently publisher.

Currently, he's chairman of the executive committee of Crain Communications Inc., publisher of AA.

Rance Crain, president of Crain Communications and editor in chief of AD AGE, praised the selection as a fitting tribute to an industry legend.

Fallon loses McElligott

By BOB GEIGER

Tom McElligott's decision to leave Fallon McElligott appears to be a severe, but not fatal, blow to one of the hottest agencies of the 1980s.

Mr. McElligott announced last week he was leaving the agency after a dispute over "the management of the agency regarding its creative direction."

There is, however, a meeting scheduled this week with Marvin Sloves, chairman-ceo of Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York, to discuss the exact terms of Mr. McElligott's departure. Scali owns 80% of Minneapolis-based Fallon.

Mr. McElligott also admitted publicly last week that he's a recovering alcoholic but said it hadn't affected his work at the agency or his decision to leave (see story at right).

"It's the most major blow [Fallon] could have," said Nancy Rice, partner at Rice & Rice and one of the original founders in 1981 (as executive art director) of Fallon McElligott Rice. She resigned in July 1985 when she left to form Rice & Rice with her husband, Nick.

But Fallon's clients, who'd fueled the agency's meteoric rise to $142 million in billings in the seven years since it opened its doors, said they plan to stick with the agency, though they regret losing Mr. McElligott's input as the agency's VP-creative director.

Just last Friday, Minnetonka Inc.'s Fragrance Marketing Group awarded the agency its estimated $3 million Vitabath bath-specialties account. The agency already handles the company's Foltene haircare line and Claire Burke home fragrances.

News of Mr. McElligott's substance abuse "was not surprising news to us," said Michael Steidle, general manager of FMG. "All our dealings with the agency have been with Pat Fallon. . . . Tom hasn't been involved with our account." Della Femina, McNamee

McElligott confronts alcoholism

By BOB GEIGER

Tom McElligott had a side to his life that colleagues and clients never saw. Away from the crowd of Clios that made him one of the best-known and most respected creators of advertising during this decade, Mr. McElligott is an alcoholic.

In early August, when he entered Hazelden Foundation's treatment facility in Center City, Minn., rumors flooded the Twin Cities about what had caused this high priest of creativity, this son of an Episcopal minister, to seek help.

Whispers tabbed Mr. McElligott as "shattered" by the charges of sexism and bad taste in the so-called "Dinka" episode and able to make few decisions, and unsure of the ones he made.

And when news hit the street last week that he planned to leave Fallon McElligott for "personal reasons," many immediately and erroneously guessed that he'd been a drug abuser.

But Mr. McElligott said he's an "advertising junkie," and a recovering alcoholic who reached for help after alcohol began harming his personal—not professional—life in July, shortly after he finished a cam-

New 'network'

Independent TV outlets may unite for ads

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Independent TV stations could band together as early as next year to create a mammoth commercial TV "network," attract national ad dollars and steer money away from the Big 3 networks and barter syndication.

The network would involve commercial time but not programming. Members would contribute a number of commercial units per evening, which then would be sold as part of a network buy.

The unnamed, unborn network is the brainchild of John Serrao, chairman of the Association of Independent Television Stations, and Preston Padden, president of INTV.

The effort represents the first such attempt by the independents to attract national money.

Messrs. Serrao and Padden hope to lure many of the nation's 245 independent TV stations to its ranks and to start operations as early as next summer, in time for the upfront TV buying season.

Details of the new network will be unveiled next month at the major trade convention for independent stations in Los Angeles.

The network will be a cooperative effort owned by the independents but operated by an outside party, its organizers said.

At least two major factors are fueling the new network idea.

First, Nielsen Media Research in May began to break out total viewing to independent TV stations in its network TV ratings reports.

> "We don't like to have another party reselling our time. It goes against our grain."
> —INTV's Serrao

That's the first time buyers could directly compare viewing of the independents nationally to the Big 3 networks and Fox Broadcasting Co., the organizers said.

Second, organizers of the new network hope to capitalize on a trend that has accelerated in recent months: the creation of "unwired" networks among independent TV stations by third parties.

With an unwired network, a third party buys commercial time on independent TV stations nationwide, then resells the time to advertisers at a markup.

There are now at least seven such networks. The biggest practitioner is the New York-based Independent Television Network, which controls most of the market.

"We don't like to have another party reselling our time," said Mr. Serrao, who also is VP-general manager at WATL, Atlanta. "It goes against our grain."

But not everyone is enamored of the unwired network trend. "We've looked at the unwired networks and have made a decision that they don't seem to work for us at the moment," said Bill Lynn, VP-corporate media director, Coca-Cola Co.

"They do give an advantage in pricing, but it doesn't seem to be any better than we do in spot," he said. "Yes, it may be an easier way to do business for some advertisers, but for us it's not."

Details such as billing and organization of the new group have yet to be resolved. If the organizers get a commitment from member stations next month, a third party to run the cooperative network will be sought, Mr. Serrao said.#

Burger King shifts could benefit Ayer

By SCOTT HUME and GARY LEVIN

Burger King Corp.'s latest marketing shuffle could be good news for N W Ayer, but the chain's franchisees still want to break up the $200 million ad account.

D. Dempsey

A. Lavely

Last week, Burger King announced the dismissal of Exec VP-Marketing Anthony M. Lavely, 45, and named C. Donald Dempsey, 42, to succeed him.

Mr. Dempsey has been serving as exec VP for Burger King's Northeastern division and previously served as the company's marketing chief.

Insiders had earlier reported that Mr. Lavely was on his way out (AA, Dec. 5).

A Burger King spokeswoman said the move didn't signal a change in the company's desire to consider "the option of another agency developing our new creative" (AA, Nov. 21).

Mr. Lavely reportedly had discussed the account with Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, an agency with which he'd worked previously, and was said to be considering FCB for the account (AA, Nov. 28).

But Mr. Lavely's troubles predated his apparent interest in switching agencies, sources said. Many franchisees considered him "unresponsive" and said they'd been wary of his lack of experience with hamburger marketing.

Mr. Lavely has worked for Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp., Jerrico's Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes chain and Pillsbury Co.'s Quik Wok during his career.

The failure of Burger King's "Triple Jump Checkers" promotional campaign (AA, Sept. 19) was "the last nail in the coffin,"

A-B shuffle puts heat on D'Arcy

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Anheuser-Busch is putting more pressure on D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles to improve creativity on the $110 million Budweiser account, following a brand management shake-up at the company.

The nation's largest brewer is shifting its successful Bud Light manager to its flagship Budweiser brand and importing an executive from DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, to take over Bud Light.

The moves strengthen A-B's ties to DDB Needham, which already handles Bud Light, Busch and the Michelob line, with billings last year of $110 million.

In the changes effective Dec. 13, Robert Gunthner, currently Budweiser senior brand manager, becomes VP, A-B International Corp., a new post; Joseph Corcoran, senior brand manager for Bud Light, becomes senior brand manager for Budweiser; and Robert Lachky, former management representative at DDB Needham on Busch and Bud Light, becomes senior brand manager for Bud Light.

A-B said the changes reflect its growing commitment to international sales. But beer industry sources suggested the concern really is with Budweiser, which represents two-thirds of A-B sales but which has seen its growth slow.

Budweiser this year is expected to grow about 2% in volume from an industry-leading 50.4 million barrels last year. That exceeds industry growth levels of 1% this year, but it falls short of Budweiser's 3% growth in 1987.

"One percent may not sound like much, but at that level, it is half a million barrels," said Manny Goldman, a beer industry analyst with PaineWebber.

Industry sources say A-B believes DMB&B shoulders some of the blame for the slowdown and has told the agency it wants fresher creative concepts on the $110

TV networks feel early chill

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—Unit prices charged by the networks for commercials took a beating in October, and the biggest reason is the Writers Guild of America strike, which ended in August.

During October, the average network prime-time 30-second unit price was $95,970, a 24% drop from the record $125,400 average registered in October 1987. This drop helped push the networks' prime-time revenue down by $100 million for the month.

The softness of October prices apparently is a reflection of advertisers' unwillingness to support the mishmash of repeats and originals that filled schedules during the strike.

Virtually every show on the networks' October schedules suffered substantially lower unit prices, according to data recently turned over to Broadcast Advertiser Reports.

"The Cosby Show," the highest-priced program in October 1987 at $369,500 per :30, saw its rate fall 29%. The show had original episodes all month.

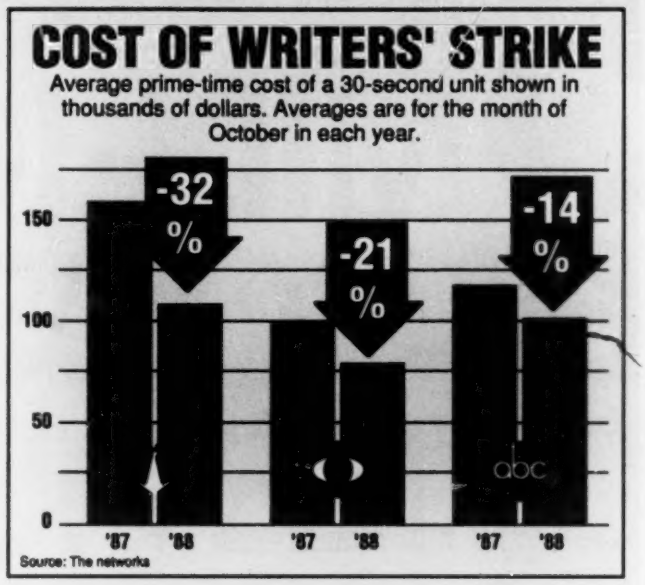
Among NBC's top shows only "ALF," at $161,000 a :30, had an increase. It went up 8%.

But the surprising loser on NBC's October books was Geraldo Rivera. His high-rated "Devil Worship" on Oct. 25 could muster only a $26,000 unit price. Many advertisers were spooked by the subject matter.

All three networks took a beating in the revenue column. Total prime-time ad sales for the month fell 23% to $325.2 million.

However, October's sales performance won't be representative of the entire year. Pricing has climbed as more original programs arrived.

Also, the networks enjoyed a record upfront sales period, soaking up more than $3.3 billion in total sales for the year. In addition, scatter—or short-term—sales have been relatively healthy.



JOHN HEILAND

But the effects of the 22-week strike were still being felt last month. During the November sweeps, the Big 3 networks had an average prime-time rating of 13.8 and a 23 share, according to final Nielsen Media Research figures released last week. The three-network average a year ago was a 14.4 rating and 24 share.

Other segments of the industry made gains in November. Fox Broadcasting Co. had a 6.8 average rating and 10 share on Sundays, up from a 5.9 rating and 10 share.

Independent TV stations had a 13.2 prime-time rating on about 245 stations, compared with a 12 rating.

NBC sold about $107 million in prime-time commercials in October, not including the final two days of the Summer Olympics or the World Series, according to BAR data. It sold $161.1 million for the same period in 1987. The drop this year was 34%.

NBC's average prime-time October :30 was $108,249, down 32%.

ABC sold $112.4 million in time, including "NFL Monday Night Football." That program accounted for more than a third of the total, which was down 16% from a year earlier.

The network's average :30 was $101,000, down 14%.

At CBS, gross prime-time sales were $105.8 million, an 18% drop. The network's average unit went for $78,700, down 21%.

Across the board, network shows clocked significantly lower unit costs, though NBC's experience was perhaps most dramatic.

"Cheers," which had only one episode in October, went for $300,000 a :30, down 2%. Other top shows included "The Golden Girls," $139,500 (down 24%); "L.A. Law," $205,500 (even); "Family Ties," $194,500 (down 11%); and "227," $89,000 (down 20%). Except for "L.A. Law" and "Family Ties," the shows were original for most of the month.

The top-priced CBS show for the month was "Knots Landing," which had its first original episode Oct. 27. A :30 went for $146,500, up 15%. Other shows: "60 Minutes," $144,620 (down 10%); "Dallas," $124,110 (down 11%); "Newhart," $113,250 (down 24%); and "Murder, She Wrote," $92,850 (down 34%). Except for "60 Minutes," these shows were all repeats in October.

ABC's big winner for the month was "Who's the Boss?" at $173,014 per :30, down 12%. The show premiered Oct. 18. Other shows: "Roseanne" ($162,129) (new program); "Head of the Class," $145,554 (down 9%); "Growing Pains," $137,514 (down 40%); and "Wonder Years," $121,945 (new program). Except for "Wonder Years," these shows all bowed in the middle of October.#

New cereal takes comic twist

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Ralston Purina Co. is introducing a children's cereal that literally takes a page from the newspaper comics.

Called Morning Funnies, the cereal features comics on a box-length flap on the back of the package. It opens to reveal two more pages of cartoons—a total of eight on each package.

Ralston has signed creators of 10 leading strips to produce comics especially for Morning Funnies. The featured strips are "Beetle Bailey," "Dennis the Menace," "Family Circle," "Funky Winkerbean," "Hagar the Horrible," "Hi & Lois," "Luann," "Marvin," "Tiger" and "What a Guy."

New strips will be rotated into the mix on a regular basis.

The presweetened cereal is shaped in small discs with smiling or laughing faces. The pieces come in blackberry, cherry, orange and peach flavors.

Ralston will support the introduction with a $15 million marketing program; about half of that will go to media advertising.

Morning Funnies will be shipped to some markets later this month; coupons break in those markets in early January, followed by TV and print in February.

Initial markets are believed to be on the West Coast. Ralston expects the product to be national by the end of January.

Noble-Tennant, Chicago, is the agency for Morning Funnies, the shop's first new Ralston account since 1986, when Fruit Islands cereal was introduced.

Morning Funnies continues Ralston's pattern of gimmicky children's cereals set by such 1988 entries as Dinersaurs and Dunkin' Donuts.

Like General Mills, General Foods Corp.'s Post division and Quaker Oats Co., Ralston has struggled to keep up with the steady stream of new products and heavy ad schedules of industry leader Kellogg Co.

Ralston's share of the $5.5 billion ready-to-eat cereal market—like that of General Mills, Quaker and Post—has dropped, to 5.3% from 5.8% for the 12 months ended July 31, said Timothy Ramey, an analyst for County Securities. Kellogg has continued to gain.#

AmEx review winding down?

NEW YORK—American Express narrowed the review for its $20 million Gold Card account to incumbent McCann-Erickson and Wunderman Worldwide, and possibly one other contender: Ammirati & Puris; Chiat/Day; Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos; or Hal Riney & Partners, sources said. AmEx said no decision has been made.

Pan Am closes in on shuttle shop

NEW YORK—Pan Am's review for its $10 million shuttle account has been pared to Grey Advertising and Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein. Presentations for the $55 million main account were made last week by D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Della Femina, McNamee/WCRS; and Ogilvy & Mather. Wells, Rich, Greene, which had handled the entire account, chose not to participate in the review.

Miller to bench longtime theme

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Miller Brewing Co. will phase out the use of ex-athletes and sports-related celebrities for its top-selling Miller Lite beer, curtailing its longtime "Tastes great, less filling" slogan.

Next March, Miller will break a totally new campaign for Lite that repositions the brew as the only light beer that's not a "watered-down version" of a regular beer.

The new creative features the "Lite Brigade," a quintet of oddball characters, as pitchmen for Miller Lite.

Miller wholesalers say they've been told the new campaign, sharing little more than tongue-in-cheek humor with the current effort, will be the mainstay of Lite's $75 million media advertising program by the end of next year.

Miller also is expected to retain secondary campaigns like the young-adult-oriented, late-night TV effort that made its debut recently (AA, Dec. 12) and may still use the 15-year-old "Tastes great, less filling" slogan (minus the retired athletes) in a small portion of spots.

The new creative work from Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, may have been what convinced Miller to keep the agency on Lite this fall after a review with other Miller agencies (AA, Sept. 26).

The Lite Brigade commercials, obtained by ADVERTISING AGE, feature five humorous characters but also a somewhat harder sell than the "Tastes great, less filling" campaign.

The characters are: Dude, "a surfer so mellow he surfs on swimming pools"; Mongo, "the toughest psychic in the world"; Coyote, "smart as a whip and almost as fast"; Johnny Tornado, "who broke more men's fists with his face than anyone alive"; and Linnell, "the renegade furnace repairman helping people in need."

The voice-over states, "No one knows where they came from, but they came just in time," in a 60-second spot introducing the campaign.

Other spots feature the five in comic situations—sometimes together, sometimes individually.

In a sharp break from past Lite advertising, the campaign takes clear aim at other light beers. Others are "watered-down versions" of regular beers, while Lite is the only light beer "brewed from the ground up."

Lite, the No. 2 beer in U.S. sales and by far the best-selling light with a 42% segment share, has seen Anheuser-Busch's Bud Light and Adolph Coors Co.'s Coors Light make inroads in the field it pioneered.

In one spot, the Lite Brigade enters a lounge with a neon sign saying "Watered Down Bar & Grill," where a bartender tells them he has watered-down versions of a steak, a lounge singer and a regular beer. So the brigade gladly provides Miller Lite beer.

In another spot, a camper at a survival camp calls Mongo to ask for a beer that isn't watered down, and the brigade comes to the rescue. As part of the commercial, the group hacks its way through a "jungle." "Not even furious ferns could keep the Lite Brigade from saving the day," says the announcer, in an apparent slap at fern bars.

All the commercials end with the tag "Join the Lite Brigade."

Miller said it remains committed to the current campaign, but declined to say whether the "Lite Brigade" campaign will become the primary creative focus.

"You will continue to see the classic Miller Lite advertising campaign," said a Miller spokesman.

"We have produced some commercial executions titled the 'Lite Brigade' that are markedly different from our classic, all-star advertising. For competitive reasons, we cannot say whether or when these spots will be aired."

The longtime "Tastes great, less filling" theme helped

Coke plans 3-D look at Super Bowl

By PATRICIA WINTERS

An odd scrimmage is shaping up between Coca-Cola USA and Pepsi-Cola Co. during NBC-TV's telecast of Super Bowl XXIII.

Coca-Cola USA will announce today that Diet Coke is teaming up with NBC Sports and the National Football League to sponsor an unprecedented 3-D program segment during the Jan. 22 game's halftime extravaganza, a source said.

The halftime segment will use Nuoptix 3-D technology, which doesn't blur the screen for viewers who aren't wearing special 3-D glasses.

The marketer had planned to use the 3-D technology earlier this year during a segment on NBC's "Moonlighting." But the commercial for Coca-Cola Classic was canceled because the Writers Guild of America strike delayed programming.

Not to be sacked by its chief rival, Pepsi-Cola Co. is negotiating to sponsor a talent show using NFL players during NBC's two-hour pregame Super Bowl show, sources said.

Pepsi and NBC will coordinate a "talent search" among active NFL players, which will result in a contest pitting six players during a "shoot-out" just before the game's telecast.

But it's not athletic prowess that will be tested in the pregame show: The players will be asked to demonstrate musical or other talents.

Said one executive close to the deal, "This will not be the 'Gong Show.' If someone comes out in a red dress and sings in a falsetto voice, he won't go on. That might be funny

Koop lashes admen at alcohol workshop

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop threw gas on a smoldering fire last Friday when he attacked by name three ad and broadcast industry executives who boycotted his workshop on drunken driving.

During that workshop, Dr. Koop accepted a set of anti-alcoholic beverage ad recommendations that drew fierce industry reaction. Then, in a surprising close, Dr. Koop accused the heads of three industry groups of trying to undermine the two-day gathering in which 10 panels put forth the proposals aimed at the heart of beer and wine advertising.

Before an audience estimated at 300 to 400 people, the surgeon general blasted Association of National Advertisers President DeWitt Helm Jr.; American Association of Advertising Agencies incoming President John O'Toole; and National Association of Broadcasters President Eddie Fritts.

Dr. Koop's outburst almost detracted from the severity of the recommendations by the workshop's advertising/promotion panel.

The panel's recommendations included:

- Eliminating most tax deductibility of advertising for alcoholic beverages.
- Banning sponsorships of sporting events by alcohol marketers.
- Ending the use of celebrity endorsers who might appeal to youth.
- Having equal amounts of alcoholic-beverage ads and counter messages.
- Ending advertising and promotion of alcoholic beverages on college campuses.
- Inserting health warnings in alcohol ads.
- Developing a public service campaign aimed at alcohol abuse.
- Shifting federal jurisdiction over alcohol and its marketing to the Food & Drug Administration from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco & Firearms.

C. Koop

What sway the recommendations might carry with Congress, federal regulatory agencies or state governments remains questionable since the surgeon general has no policy-making authority.

Based on precedent from 10 previous surgeon general's workshops, virtually all recommendations by individual panels come to represent the official position of the surgeon general's office, a Koop spokesman said.

The outburst by Dr. Koop stemmed from the complaints of the three associations over the advertising/marketing panel's composition.

At least eight of the panel's 12 members were known to favor restricting alcohol advertising and the NAB cited that imbalance when it declined an invitation to join the panel. The ANA and Four A's declined subsequent invitations for the same reason.

"I'd hardly call it a parochial group," Dr. Koop said. He accused the three groups of trying to force

CBS sparks debate with baseball bid

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—CBS' landmark $1.1 billion deal with Major League Baseball is stirring debate among advertisers about whether the deal will mean dramatically higher advertising prices.

The contract gives CBS total network TV exclusivity for baseball over four seasons starting in 1990.

Exclusivity, however, doesn't necessarily guarantee profits.

L. Tisch

Sources said NBC and ABC executives were "baffled" by CBS' huge bid, claiming both networks came in roughly $400 million under CBS.

Even Laurence Tisch, CBS ceo, stopped short of calling the deal "profitable" at a news conference last week. Instead, he called it "a risk but a kind of risk we like to take."

Profits might not be what the troubled CBS network is seeking from the deal, at least in the short term. Two weeks ago, CBS experienced one of the worst fall prime-time weekly average ratings in its history, a 10.7.

By securing the World Series and league championship games, CBS can virtually guarantee affiliates and advertisers that it will be a competitive prime-time force for at least the first half of the 1990s.

CBS also could become the first network in history to have the rights to so many other major sporting events. Currently, it has broadcast rights for football, basketball, baseball, golf and tennis.

Still, the huge, $1.1 billion price tag is worrisome to some leading advertisers.

Joe Cronin, vice chairman of Saatchi & Saatchi DFS, Torrance, Calif., the agency for Toyota Motor Sales USA, called it "a little disturbing," adding that he expects the network to pass its costs on to sponsors.

Still, he said, it's not easy for an advertiser to pass up the World Series. "It's hard to look at it and not be interested," he said. "If I was at CBS, I'd be pretty happy. As a single thing to buy, you can't beat baseball and the World Series."

Dave Martin, VP-corporate media director, Stroh Brewery Co., said, "When you spend $1 billion, you've got to recoup it.

"I'd imagine that in the planning

Fast-food menu: more discounts

By SCOTT HUME

The fast-food restaurant industry is preparing to meet a tough year ahead with a generous serving of coupons and discounts.

Inflation-adjusted sales growth of 2.5% in 1989 was predicted by Technomic Consultants in its annual survey for the International Foodservice Manufacturers Association. That compares with a 3.5% advance this year and 1987's 4% real growth. The association projected this year's sales at $61.7 million.

> "We expect the first quarter to be very, very tough, with heavy and deep discounting by all, including the major chains."

The first quarter always is the industry's slowest time, with sales 10% to 15% below the year's average. But rather than hibernate, fast-food marketers plan to battle the winter sales doldrums.

Wendy's International on Jan. 2 will set the marketing tone with a national direct-mail distribution of a couponed pop-up themed to the chain's 20th birthday.

The insert includes coupons for hamburgers, baked potatoes and Wendy's SuperBar buffet and carries the chain's newly modified ad theme, "The best burgers in the business . . . and a whole lot more."

Impact, Chicago, does Wendy's promotions; Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles advertising.

This will be the first time a 3-D mail insert has been used by a restaurant chain, said Wendy's VP-Corporate Communications Dennis Lynch.

Operator co-ops are handling the 11 million-plus mailing on a market-by-market basis, but Mr. Lynch said ADVO-System, Hartford, Conn., will be a primary handler.

Because of the expense for the 3-D pop-up, franchisee sources said, the Wendy's National Advertising Program, which oversees marketing, will give each participating store $150 to subsidize the mailing (up to a maximum national subsidy of $600,000).

"The competition in the first quarter is going to be intense, and we won't be sitting on the sidelines," Mr. Lynch said. "We'll discount, but we'll be selective in our discounting. It won't be our major focus."

Franchise sources also said Wendy's will air a network TV "video coupon" during the first two weeks of February. The spot will offer Wendy's Single hamburger for 99¢ (vs. an average $1.49).

That's the sort of deeply discounted offer other chains expect to face next year. If the others follow the No. 4 fast-food chain's lead, it could lead to a reversal of the industry's move away from discounting.

During the second half of 1988, 13.7% of fast-food transactions have

International print builds rates, reach

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Marketers saw their advertising consumed by a wider international audience in 1988 over the prior year, but paid more to deliver that message, according to the fourth annual Global Marketing & Media survey prepared by ADVERTISING AGE.

Composite circulation for the international newspapers and periodicals monitored in this survey grew 2.1% in 1988 to 56.8 million subscribers, which averaged out to a 2.5% growth for the 15 publications analyzed on a year-to-year basis.

Advertising costs for a b&w page, one-time insertion, however, grew an average 7.6%, helping dictate an average cost-per-thousand growth of 5.6% per publication. Ad costs will continue to rise in 1989. A spot check of the publishers indicated the average hike will be 6%.

Only three of the publications—National Geographic, WorldPaper and Fortune—reported year-to-year declines in circulation, although each compensated for the decline with increased ad costs.

The Atlantic region, encompassing Europe, the Middle East and Africa, grew 4.5% in circulation to a composite 9.7 million to claim the largest percentage increase among the five regions monitored. By sheer numbers, North America dominated circulation with a composite 42.2 million, up 1.8% from the prior year.

Latin America/West Indies circulation grew to 1.7 million, a modest 1.6% increase, while Asia/Pacific slipped to 3.1 million, down 1% from 1987.

The dailies category was most favorable for publishers. All publications registered increases in circulation, ad rates and CPM (per b&w page). Among the dailies, USA Today gained the most circulation, up 6.9%. Its 8.3% b&w ad rate increase gave it a modest global CPM growth of 4.5%. The Financial Times proved most costly to advertisers on average. Its ad rates grew 16.6% and CPM 14.8%, while circulation registered a modest 2.5% growth.

From the advertiser's point of view, the weeklies category proved the overall good buy, because two of the five publications had lower b&w ad rates from the prior year and three offered lower CPMs, while each weekly showed circulation increases.

Among the weeklies, Newsweek and the Guardian Weekly lowered their rates 0.2% and 1.7%, respectively, which translated into 3.5% and 2.7% declines in CPMs when folding in narrow circulation gains for both. Business Week hiked its b&w ad rate 1.9%. When combined with a 3.5% growth in circulation, BW's global CPM fell 2.3%. The weeklies' reached 11.3 million subscribers.

Monthlies continue to reach the widest global customer base by far. As a group they claimed 1988 circulation of 41.2 million, up 1.8%. Reader's Digest alone accounted for 69% of the total circulation of monthlies, a category that became increasingly expensive during the year. RD was typical of the group, registering a 9.9% increase in b&w page rate, which when combined with a 2.8% growth in circulation, elevated its global CPM 6.9%. Only Scientific American ran counter to the group mentality by maintaining its b&w rate from the previous year that produced a 1.2% decline in global CPM when combined with a 1.3% gain in circulation.

Among the publications that provided a complete report on year-to-year movement in ad revenues, rates and pages (See chart on Page 27), all but Time had greater increases in ad rates than in ad pages when the publication recorded a growth in ad revenues. Time charted an 8% ad page growth for the fiscal year ended June 1988 from the comparable prior-year period, while boosting advertising rates only 3.4%. This is likely to continue at Time in 1989, because the magazine is cutting ad rates for its huge U.S. edition. Scientific American ad revenues declined during the period as its percentage increase in ad rates dipped even below its percentage growth in ad pages.

Advertising in global media continues to be the province of major consumer ad categories, particularly airlines, financial services, communications, automobiles and tobacco. Only the more industrial aircraft industry broke into the ranks of this consumer-dominated ad domain.

Among the top five advertisers supplied by each publication, airlines drew 15 mentions with Lufthansa leading the pack with four mentions. However, AT&T's six mentions led all advertisers, followed by IBM with five and Unilever top spender outside U.S.

By NANCY GIGES

The Anglo-Dutch conglomerate Unilever retained its No. 1 ranking as the top advertiser in ADVERTISING AGE's second ranking of the top 50 leading advertisers in spending outside the U.S.

Unilever invested $731.7 million in 1987 in non-U.S. ad spending.

Unilever is followed by Cincinnati-based Procter & Gamble Co.; Nestle S.A., Vevey, Switzerland; Nissan Motor Corp., Tokyo; and Kao Corp., Tokyo.

Eight companies joined the list. They are Nippon Telegraph & Telephone, Tokyo; Asahi Breweries, Tokyo; Sapporo Breweries, Tokyo; Takeda Chemical Industries, Osaka; Citroen S.A., Paris; Mitsubishi Motors Corp., Tokyo; McDonald's Corp., Oak Brook, Ill., and Marui Co., Tokyo.

They replaced Siemens, Munich, West Germany; Peugeot, Paris; Suzuki Motor Corp., Hamanagun, Japan; Cadbury Schweppes, London; House Food Ind. Co., Osaka, Japan; Hanson Trust PLC, London; Barilla Pasta, Parma, Italy, and Rowntree Mackintosh, York, U.K.

When U.S. spending is included, P&G grabs the No. 1 spot due to the company's heavy investment in advertising in the U.S.

Procter & Gamble's total worldwide spending is estimated at $2.11 billion, with $724.0 million coming from outside the U.S. Unilever's total worldwide expenditures are estimated at $1.31 billion, putting it in the No. 3 spot worldwide.

On a worldwide basis, Philip Morris Cos. pulled up to the No. 2 spot, also because of its hefty U.S. spending. When U.S. spending is excluded, Philip Morris falls to No. 22.

Worldwide, Unilever is trailed by General Motors as No. 4, which ranked No. 13 in non-U.S. spending, and Ford Motor Co. as No. 5, which ranked No. 9 in non-U.S. ad spending.

The top 50 in non-U.S. spending invested $9.57 billion outside the U.S. in 1987. This compares with $7.3 billion in 1986. These companies spent $19.43 billion, up from $15.1 billion in 1986.

The non-U.S. annual growth of 31% is a factor of more comprehensive reporting in 1987 over the prior year, exchange-rate fluctuations as well as growth in advertising in "real" terms.

The dollar declined an average 8% against the currencies of 10 major advertising countries, which inflates the current-year totals.

Likewise, advertiser lists supplied by the various countries ran much deeper than 1986. For example, the Unilever spending totals came from 25 countries in 1987, compared with 11 in 1986. However, of those same 11 in 1987, Unilever spending advanced 35.7% to indicate considerable "real" growth globally. Same-country comparisons for others in the top 50 chart showed similar increases. Of the top 50, 29 are based in Japan, 10 in the U.S., three in the Netherlands, and two each in France, Italy and West Germany, and one each in Switzerland and the U.K.

Among industry categories, automotive marketers led the field with 11 entries, accounting for $2.26 billion in 1987 ad spending. Eight food marketers contributed $1.6 billion; six soap and detergent marketers contributed $2.41 billion; seven electronics marketers, $1.12 billion; six retailers, $692 million; four beer companies, $539 million.

Information for ADVERTISING AGE's ranking of the top 50 spenders in non-U.S. advertising was compiled from data supplied on 43 major advertiser countries by AA's international network and sources around the world (See "How to read this ranking" on Page 27).

Lists obtained from each country ran up to 100 advertisers long, the length depending on the availability of the data and its reliability. Also, some listings ranked brands rather than advertisers. These brand totals were folded into their respective parents.

The 50 advertisers ranked in this issue undoubtedly advertised in more countries than credited in this report given the varied length of the lists obtained from various countries.

However, AA did obtain lengthy lists from countries that dominate worldwide advertising expenditures.

Unilever made the top 10 lists in 20 countries. In nine —Austria, the U.K., Greece, Indonesia, the Netherlands, Portugal, South Africa, Thailand and West Germany— the company ranked No. 1; in Australia, Brazil and Notes: Advertising expenditures are in thousands of U.S. dollars. In many countries, ad spending figures are estimates and/or gross figures. For example, in Mexico, many advertisers receive a discount as high as 70%. In Italy, the discount can run between 40% and 60%. Sources: * indicates that U.S. spending figures include measured media only as reported by BAR/LNA Multi-Media reports. All other U.S. spending figures include estimated unmeasured expenditures, taken from AA's 100 Leading National Advertisers, Sept. 28, 1988 and Second 100 Leading National Advertisers, Nov. 21, 1988. Non-US ad spending includes only countries in the column headed "Countries in which spending was reported." See notes beneath top rankings beginning on Page 28 for sources and currency exchange rates. See also "How to read this ranking," Page 27.

How to read this ranking

This special section is made up of two parts: ADVERTISING AGE's second annual ranking of the top 50 non-U.S. advertisers and AA's fourth annual Global Media lineup.

Global marketers

The advertiser ranking on Page 26 includes spending figures from 43 countries. AA correspondents compiled ad expenditures for global marketers. Depending on availability of reliable ad spending data, country lists ran from as many as 100 advertisers to only the top 10 spenders.

Reporting of local market spending in general ran much deeper than last year, making year-to-year comparisons difficult. In the main chart, the column titled "Countries in which spending was reported" illustrates the depth of coverage.

Research companies, media tracking services, marketing publications and ad agencies were various sources for the data. There is no standard procedure of monitoring ad spending worldwide, and as a result advertising data may be accumulated by brands, subsidiary or by parent. Licensing and co-op agreements further complicate data assemblage. Wherever possible, spending reported by brand or subsidiary was assigned to the parent, whose names were "Americanized" in this ranking.

Sources are listed beneath the tables titled "Top advertisers by country" beginning on Page 28. All figures are given in U.S. dollars. Source lines also include currency conversion rates for both 1987 and 1986, unless data was provided by research companies in U.S. dollars.

Some foreign ad expenditures are gross spending figures. Actual media rates may be discounted as much as 70% in some markets, but advertisers are attributed the rate card rates by local monitoring services. This process is accepted in Italy and Mexico, for example.

U.S. advertising expenditures given in the table on Page 26 are estimates and include magazine, newspaper, newspaper supplement, outdoor, network TV, spot TV, network radio and cable TV networks from BAR/LNA Multi-Media reports; spot radio from Radio Expenditure Reports; business publications from MMS-Rome Reports, farm publications from Agricultural Marketing Information Services (AGRICOM), and unmeasured ad spending (sales promotion, direct response, etc.), which is an AA estimate. U.S. spending figures marked with an (*) include only measured media from BAR/LNA Multi-Media reports. See AA's 100 Leading National Advertisers, Sept. 28, 1988, for top U.S. advertiser profiles.

Global media

Circulation data collected from publishers in this report were for June, 1988, and were compared with June, 1987. Ad rates were those in effect at the same mid-year period.

Criteria for a publication's inclusion in the chart on Page 22 are:

- Substantial mass circulation on at least three continents.
- Worldwide circulation of at least 50,000, and circulation of international editions equal to at least 10% of the domestic circulation.
- Editorial content global in scope and primarily in English.
- Advertising in all editions purchased through a central office.

Trade publications are not mass-circulation publications and are excluded from this listing.

Licensed publications also are excluded, because they lack central control on the advertising side.#

International print

General Motors with three. Of these, only GM ranked among the top non-U.S. advertisers charted elsewhere in this report.

Financial institutions followed airlines with 10 mentions, although American Express, with two, was the only financial services advertiser to receive more than one nod.

The only new entry to Global Media in 1988 was Elle, founded in France shortly after World War II, and growing at a breakneck pace since 1985 when it launched editions in the U.S. and U.K., both joint ventures between Hachette and Murdoch Magazines. Murdoch has since sold its interest to Hachette. AA excluded the monthly's circulation and advertising data from aggregate totals because its heavy launch activity in 1988 would have distorted any comparison between the current and prior year. Elle has launched in Italy, Hong Kong, Sweden, Portugal, Greece, West Germany and China since 1987—all in the local language.

In 1989, Elle will introduce a group buy and payment in dollars through Interdeco, an advertising clearinghouse operation with five global centers.

What Grand Met got

Pillsbury, BK get product 'valuations'

An Advertising Age roundup

Grand Metropolitan next month is expected to apply its own "brand valuation" system to the brands it acquired in the $5.75 billion takeover of Pillsbury Co.

Grand Met "almost certainly" will include its system of brand valuations of Pillsbury and Burger King Corp. on its balance sheet, said David Geddes, spokesman for Grand Met in London.

Grand Met believes the new accounting practice of brand valuation helps assess the underlying brand assets of acquired companies. The practice reflects intangible assets not otherwise considered.

Analysts say it will find that many areas desperately need both new leadership and more aggressive marketing.

Several months ago, Grand Met was the first U.K. company to begin assessing the value of recently acquired brands and using the figure to enhance the company's worth on its balance sheet. Since then, other companies like U.K. baked-goods marketer Rank Hovis McDougall have adopted brand valuation.

Brand valuation has already been applied to major brands acquired by Grand Met in recent years. Pearle Health Services, Alpo Petfoods, Smirnoff and one or two other Heublein brands are believed to be involved.

What Grand Met's evaluation will uncover is a group of brands that have suffered as much from a lack of consistency and management focus as anything.

The takeover fight not only cost Pillsbury $21 million, but, more importantly, the time and attention of its top management. One example of what Grand Met will find is Van de Kamp's seafood products, which have seen their sales slip in recent months because of spotty ad support, sources say. And Pillsbury is taking a beating in the cutthroat

Clock's ticking in agency fight for Burger King

By SCOTT HUME

Ninety days.

That's how much time some Burger King Corp. franchisees and industry analysts suggest N W Ayer has to convince new Pillsbury owner Grand Metropolitan not to throw the $200 million account open to a review.

That 90-day period will be enough time, these observers say, for Grand Met to settle in, find a buyer for Pillsbury Co.'s S&A Restaurant Corp. (which it must divest), evaluate the fast-food chain's operations—including marketing—and decide where changes need to be made.

Undoubtedly, changes must be made if Burger King is to right itself and again be competitive with sales and ad-spending leader McDonald's Corp.

Within 90 days, too, the New York agency will have completed a successor campaign to the current "We do it like you do it" effort.

How Grand Met executives and Burger King operators respond to that creative likely will decide Ayer's fate.

Perhaps a dozen agencies will spend the next 90 days preparing for an official agency review that likely would follow if Ayer's new campaign falls flat.

Major New York agencies expected to pursue the Burger King account include Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt; D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Lintas:New York; McCann-Erickson Worldwide; and Wells, Rich, Greene. Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, earlier considered by some the leading contender (AA, Nov. 28), still is in a good position: Grand Met knows the agency since it handles the Pearle Vision Centers unit.

Apparently stung by extensive media coverage of Burger King's history of marketing problems, Ayer's predecessor, J. Walter Thompson USA, issued a three-page statement defending its record during its 11 years on the account. JWT blamed the restaurant

Campbell, P&G plan shift in agency compensation

By JUDANN DAGNOLI and LAURIE FREEMAN

Campbell Soup Co. and Procter & Gamble Co. are planning new agency compensation systems for 1989, a year already mired in gloomy ad spending predictions.

Campbell will start testing a new system Feb. 1 with one or two agencies, rather than immediately implementing it with all Campbell shops, said Paul Mulcahy, VP-advertising.

He declined to identify the agencies or provide details of the new system.

Campbell spends $235 million annually on advertising. The company's main agencies are Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, New York; FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York; W.B. Doner & Co., Southfield, Mich.; Ogilvy & Mather, New York; and Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco.

Agency sources said P&G will institute a new compensation system July 1 for all its agencies.

P&G's domestic spending is estimated at $1.3 billion, and its agencies include Leo Burnett USA and Tatham-Laird & Kudner, both Chicago, in addition to N W Ayer; D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Grey Advertising; Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising; and Wells, Rich, Greene, all New York.

Campbell's system is believed to lower the base compensation below 15% and give incremental revenue for superior creative work. Campbell now pays its agencies a straight 15% commission.

The plan has been in the works since last spring, when Campbell USA President Herb Baum said the company needed a way to improve creativity, which he said was lacking at many of Camp-

Scali mulls buyback options

NEW YORK—Scali, McCabe, Sloves is getting closer to acquiring a majority interest in the $700 million agency from parent Ogilvy Group, officials confirmed. As one of several options, Scali is seeking an investment bank or other financial partner that would join with the agency and its 25%-owned U.K. affiliate, Abbott Mead Vickers, London, to acquire more than two-thirds of Scali. A deal, contingent on Ogilvy approval, would likely be signed by midyear. An Ogilvy Group board meeting held last week apparently was unrelated to Scali's buyback plans (see related story on Page 2).

Purina's animated mouse tells a cat "You want the whole Kit 'N Kaboodle" in this spot from DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago. Pet-food marketers are sending that message to cat owners in 1989.

Cats' new popularity makes marketers purr

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON and MARCY MAGIERA

Faced with a declining dog population, pet-food companies are out to make 1989 the Year of the Cat with a focus on premium products.

Category leader Ralston Purina Co. is heading the new-product assault on the $2.1 billion market, but Carnation Co., Heinz Pet Products Co., Alpo Petfoods and newcomer Edward Lowe Industries aren't far behind.

Purina, on the heels of its November introductions of Kit 'N Kaboodle cat food and Whisker Lickin's treats, is readying another major new cat food and at least two relaunches for early 1989.

The marketer may overwhelm its competition with a flood of new products designed to fortify its leadership in the category.

Rolling national in January are Cat Chow Plus, a mirror image of Purina O.N.E. premium dog food, and Kitten Chow Dairy Formula, a line extension of its $32 million Kitten Chow franchise.

Avrett, Free & Ginsberg, New York, agency for Cat Chow and Kitten Chow, has been assigned both new Purina products.

Cat Chow Plus represents an attempt to lure sales from non-grocery outlets, such as pet shops and veterinarians' offices—where sales of premium-price cat foods like Iams, Hill's Science Diet and Purina's own ProPlan are booming.

Like O.N.E., Cat Chow Plus is chicken-based, in contrast to most grain-based supermarket cat foods. Purina will stress the brand's high quality, good taste and optimum digestibility in a multimedia campaign breaking in February.

Also in January, Purina will roll national with Kitten Chow Dairy Formula, which will get its own ad campaign.

The new product is a dry cat food coated with milk and cheese flavors. But the real hook is the packaging: To reinforce the brand's calcium content, Kitten Chow Dairy Formula will be sold in 12- and 18-ounce packages shaped like milk cartons.

Purina is racing to beat Carnation to market. Carnation's Friskies PetCare division will complete a national rollout of its Friskies Kitten Formula, a calcium-fortified dry food in a milk carton package, by spring.

Carnation hopes its Kitten Formula will garner a larger share of the cat-food market for its 33-year-old Friskies brand by developing cat owners' loyalty to the brand early.

The company will start national advertising and promotions in the spring. Lintas:New York is Friskies' agency.

The upcoming battle over calcium content is typical of the industry's new emphasis on products that encourage owners to pamper cats as they have dogs.

Another example of this is cat treats. Until this year, the market for cat treats was dominated quietly by Quaker Oats Co.'s Pounce and E-II Holdings' Bonkers. But Heinz launched Finicky Bits early in 1988, and Purina followed just last month with Whisker Lickin's.

Although still small, the cat-treat market represents great growth potential; sales grew

Ogilvy board wrestles with stock price

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Ogilvy Group, under pressure to improve its earnings, is getting concerned about unfriendly takeover rumors.

The board of directors held an unscheduled meeting last week where it may have discussed a possible share repurchase program or dividend increase.

Still gun-shy from an aborted takeover attempt last year, rumors also persisted about a potential buyout bid from WPP Group, though none of those reports could be confirmed and there's no evidence the company is "in play."

Ogilvy officials refused to disclose the substance of the Dec. 20 meeting or how many of its directors attended.

"We do not reveal our agenda," said Kenneth Roman, chairman-ceo. "If we had decided something major, we would have announced it."

But a securities analyst who asked to remain unidentified said Ogilvy executives have inquired in recent weeks about the market's probable reaction to a dividend boost or an additional share repurchase program.

"They're disturbed that their earnings could disappoint," the analyst said. These actions would "put away a couple of acorns for the next year and make their comparisons look better."

Analysts believe Ogilvy's lackluster earnings performance in recent years makes it the most attractive

Ad groups ponder response to Koop

By JANET MEYERS

WASHINGTON—Major ad, media and alcohol associations are treading carefully in their battle over the alcohol advertising restrictions favored by U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop.

The proposals from Dr. Koop's workshop include inserting health warnings in alcohol ads, ending celebrity endorsements, eliminating tax deductibility of alcohol advertising and banning sponsorship of sporting events (AA, Dec. 19).

At a National Association of Broadcasters meeting Dec. 21, executives from ad, media and alcohol groups discussed how to handle Dr. Koop, who lambasted these associations for boycotting his Dec. 16 workshop on drunken driving.

"We don't know if any rational approach will be persuasive," said David Blair, government affairs representative for the National Beer Wholesalers Association, which had sued to force the workshop to be open to the public. "The only avenue available to us is to criticize the recommendations."

Most associations indicate they won't seek private meetings with Dr. Koop but will instead provide him with an artillery of facts and studies that show no links between advertising and alcohol abuse.

"Can we change his mind?" asked Wallace Snyder, senior VP for the American Advertising Federation. "We don't know."

The groups have until Jan. 31 to file comments with the surgeon gen-

Yellow Pages rivals dwindle

By JUDITH GRAHAM

A major retrenchment under way in the Yellow Pages business could mean higher prices for advertisers next year.

Yellow Pages advertising rates could start rising by as much as 9% to 12%, agency experts say, compared with average annual rate increases of 4% to 5% between 1985 and 1988.

"With reduced competition in several major markets, there won't be as much control over rates," said Linda Noyes Singer, director of the Yellow Pages division of Della Femina, McNamee/WCRS, Boston.

"There is a distinct possibility that rates will rise again from the 4%-to-5% levels of the last few years to the 10%-plus level," said Robert D. Hickson, chairman of Ketchum Yellow Pages, New York, an agency subsidiary of Ketchum Advertising.

The most dramatic sign of retrenchment is the recent exit of Southwestern Bell Publications' Mast Advertising & Publishing subsidiary from New York, Chicago and St. Petersburg, Fla.

"I'm very sorry to see them go," said Lee Matthews, president of Bernard Hodes Telephone Marketing Services, the Yellow Pages agency subsidiary of Omnicom Group. "Competition is healthy for us and our clients. This gives incumbent directories too much power to do what they will to advertisers and consumers."

Other signs that publishers' competitive strategies are failing abound.

Just a month before Southwestern Bell's withdrawal, NYNEX Information Resources Co. announced it would stop publishing directories

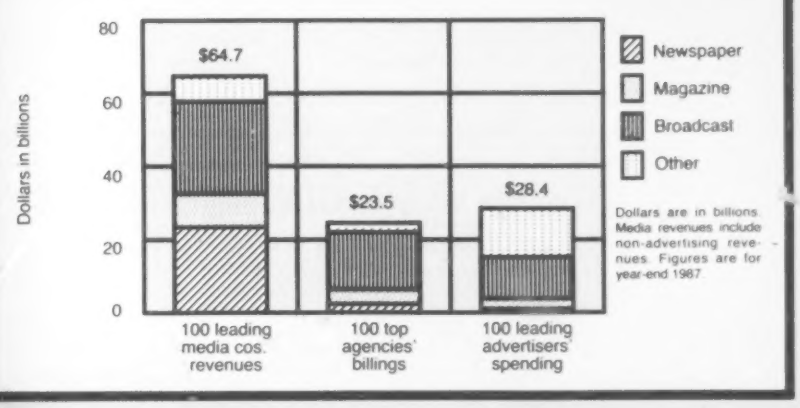
Revenues, billings & ad spending



Dollars are in billions. Media revenues include non-advertising revenues. Figures are for year-end 1987.

The story behind the Power

One of ADVERTISING AGE's editors wanted to call this four-page data section "Chart Attack."

It may be catchy, but was voted down as being a little too glib for the subject. Meanwhile, AA's number crunchers shifted into overdrive to create "Power Charts." It is almost as catchy and tells the story behind the power companies in media, agencies and advertisers.

The personnel list from the marketing department of just one of these companies filled several pages of our "100 Leading National Advertisers" issue. These companies represent the power to sell anything and the resources to spend more than $100 billion doing it, according to Robert J. Coen, senior VP, director-forecasting, McCann-Erickson.

They also represent the power to communicate. In 1988, AA's 500-agency directory represented billings of $28.8 billion. And the 100 Leading Media Companies realized gross media revenues of nearly $65 billion.

This year we also charted the power markets. They first appeared in the media issue and are reprinted on Page 13, ranked by media revenues per TV household.

"Power Charts" culls information on the leaders from the most important parts of marketing. It may be a lot of numbers, but we hope you won't feel like you're being attacked.

Notes to advertiser charts

Charts on this page are reprinted from AA's 100 Leading National Advertisers, Sept 28, 1988.

Ad spending figures in the 100 LNA issue come from several sources. BAR/LNA Multi-Media reports supply the bulk of information, including magazine and newspaper supplement data from Publishers Information Bureau, outdoor data from Institute of Outdoor Advertisers and Outdoor Advertisers Association of America, and network TV, spot TV, cable TV networks and network radio from Broadcast Advertisers Reports. Other major spending data and their sources include newspaper from Media Records (now part of LNA), spot radio from Radio Expenditure Reports, business publication from MMS-Rome Reports and farm publications from Agricultural Marketing Information Services (AGRICOM). Spending data are combined with unmeasured ad spending figures, which are AA estimates. Unmeasured ad spending includes couponing, direct mail and sales promotion, to name a few.

GM corporate ads climb over clutter

By SCOTT HUME

Despite the bemoaning of "commercial clutter," consumers can spot the new and the different.

In early November, General Motors Corp. began a new TV and print corporate campaign from N W Ayer, Detroit, themed "All of GM, going all out for you." Consumers noticed it.

Despite the billions of dollars spent on automobile advertising—including the $1 billion GM alone spent last year on its Buick, Cadillac, Chevrolet, Oldsmobile and Pontiac lines—a fairly quiet corporate message got through. GM tied for ninth (with Chevrolet, no less) on the November adWatch ranking of best-recalled advertising.

This was the GM name's first appearance this year among the top 10.

Appropriately, November was the second consecutive month in which political advertising was the best recalled.

The effectiveness of GM's corporate campaign also showed up when the 1,000 adults surveyed were asked which car or truck advertising first came to mind. GM placed fifth, with 4.1% of first responses, trailing No. 1 Ford (24.4%), Chevrolet (18.5%), Toyota (6.3%) and Oldsmobile (4.3%).

Oldsmobile's showing also is worth noting. During Summer Olympics broadcasts in September, Oldsmobile broke a new campaign—themed "The new generation of Oldsmobile"—that tries to make the line more appealing to younger drivers (AA, Sept. 12). Celebrities who appear with their children in the spots include Priscilla Presley, Frankie Avalon and William Shatner.

Oldsmobile's appearance in the No. 4 slot in the car category is the first time it's ever cracked the top five. And it narrowly missed a doubly impressive debut by ranking No. 12 in overall top-of-mind recall.

Executives at Oldsmobile and agency Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, will be interested to learn that the advertising has indeed scored well with young people. Among adWatch respondents ages 25 to 34, top-of-mind awareness of Oldsmobile advertising was higher than for category leader Ford.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and the Gallup Organization. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that first comes to mind, both overall and in specific product categories. The phone survey has a margin of error of 3.1%.

Among other significant changes in the November survey:

- In September's survey, Apple Computer and IBM Corp. were neck and neck in the computers category; in October, Apple's awareness score moved ahead again. Last month, Apple pulled away with a 4.4 percentage-point gain, garnering 38.5% of first mentions. IBM dropped 5.3 points to a 21.4% share of first mentions.

Radio Shack was third with a 3% share.

- McDonald's Corp. in October became the first advertiser to get more than 50% of first mentions in a category with a 51.7% share in the fast-food category. Last month, it slipped back under the midpoint with a 49.2% share.

Burger King Corp. remained second with 12.8%; Hardee's Food Systems and Wendy's International tied for third with 5.6%.#

quick success, "U.B.U." may not be back. But another said that "when the company needs to make a fashion statement again, 'U.B.U.' will be back."

That may not be any time soon.

Reebok built its market share largely because of its fashion appeal, which made it popular with nathletic people as well as fitness buffs. But in the current athletic-shoe market, which emphasizes performance, a focus on style alone won't keep Reebok on top.

Nike's gains this year have been attributed to its continued emphasis on serious fitness with campaigns from Wieden & Kennedy, Portland, Ore.

Earlier this year, Reebok had hoped to anchor its performance message around Los Angeles Clipper Danny Manning. But after a delay in his signing with the team and the U.S. basketball team's less than stellar performance at the Summer Olympics, that plan was put on hold.

Instead, Reebok plans to use Mr. Manning and his father, former Chicago Bull Ed Manning, as part of its Legends campaign, but no spots featuring the Mannings have been shot yet, sources said.

And while Reebok is sharpening its advertising focus, it's also lining up new-product introductions for 1989, among them a performance line of shoes and "body shaping" shoes, a new type of aerobic shoe.#

ADMAN OF THE YEAR

Michael Eisner

Energetic chief executive keeps ideas flowing at Disney

By WAYNE WALLEY

Michael Eisner, who was brought in to reanimate Walt Disney Co. and has since engineered one of the most dramatic corporate turnarounds in Hollywood history, is ADVERTISING AGE's Adman of the Year for 1988.

But the modest 46-year-old downplays his role in bringing the entertainment company back into prominence. He likens his job as chairman-ceo to that of a cheerleader, albeit a well-paid one.

"We have fantastic products in all sorts of different areas and we have extremely capable advertising and marketing people," he said. "I just watch this unbelievable operation.

"I spend most of my time having one guy in one piece of our company call the other guy. The ideas are always there. It's a matter of recognizing them in the air, flicking them out like a fly and then executing them."

Whatever it is Mr. Eisner does, he's done it well, resurrecting the dreams of Walt Disney and tossing in a few of his own fantasies while building a $3.4 billion entertainment powerhouse. He's nearly tripled company revenues during his four-year tenure, while adding seven-figure bonuses and lucrative stock options to his reported $750,000 annual salary.

Name a segment of the entertainment business today and Disney likely is one of its leaders.

Even Roy E. Disney, vice chairman of the board and nephew of the company founder, has been impressed with Mr. Eisner and his new staff—and the energy they've infused into others who may have become stagnant in the two decades following Walt Disney's death in 1966.

"We've become an idea company again," Mr. Disney said recently.

Those outside the company say Mr. Eisner's arrival—and his magnet, which drew a score of executives to Disney—was the company's turning point. But Mr. Eisner believes the corporate battle for control before he was hired actually set the stage for the famed animation house's renaissance.

The time was 1984. The studio's movie division had produced a string of expensive duds. "The Wonderful World of Disney," the company's flagship TV series, was canceled. Company stock dropped in price. Corporate raiders circled and, when the dust cleared, Texas' Bass Brothers Enterprises had control.

With that change, Ron Miller, Walt Dis-

Yugo's woes could foretell shop review

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Global Motors, beset by inner turmoil and in search of new investors, may also be searching for a new agency for its Yugo import car.

Advertising for the Yugoslavian-built car has been sharply curtailed, sales have fallen steeply, leading to questions about the viability of the franchise. Mabon, Nugent & Co., a New York investment company, bought out entrepreneur Malcolm Bricklin's 70% stake in Global Motors in April for $40 million.

Paul Lambert, president of Yugo agency Lambert/Dale, New York, said Global Motors owes "millions of dollars" on bills run up with TV networks, syndicators, publications and vendors.

"[Global Motors], as well as Mabon Nugent, has not lived up to its payment schedule," Mr. Lambert said. "There is a problem with any future broadcast placement due to delinquent bills."

About delinquent bills, a Global Motors official said, "No comment." Network executives couldn't be reached for comment.

But in an earlier interview, company officials were upbeat. Yugo has cut ad spending because it's "saving its ammunition" for two major product launches, said Anthony Ciminera, exec VP in charge of public relations and product planning at the Yugo America subsidiary of Global Motors. The first launch will be for a "dramatically upgraded" version of the company's base car going on sale in the spring, he said.

Mr. Ciminera said Lambert/Dale remains agency of record, but said some new investors may soon come on board and "they should have some voice in the decision on who should handle the advertising for 1989."

Automotive News reported that one possible new investor is Zavodi Crvena Zastava, parent company of the Yugoslavian car's builder.

Lambert/Dale's most recent ads had positioned the Yugo as "the toughest, most dependable cars a little money can buy," an attempt to overcome the negative media reports that followed the car's arrival with a $3,990 price tag in 1985.

Yugo officials had talked of doubling their ad budget to $48 million in 1988, but that never materialized. Measured media spending was $12.5 million in the first half of 1988, according to Leading National Advertisers.

In addition to cutting back ad spending, Yugo has pulled out of upcoming auto shows in Detroit, Washington and Chicago, citing unavailability of new-product prototypes and staff shortages.

Recently, William Prior, president of Global Motors, was ousted from the company, and 71 other employees at headquarters in Upper Saddle River, N.J., were laid off in a cost-cutting move.#

General Foods tries to hitch a ride on oat bran's popularity by promoting Grape-Nuts as a mix-in to oatmeal.

Riding oat craze

GF touts Grape-Nuts for hot cereals

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

General Foods Corp. hopes to capitalize on the growing popularity of oat bran and oat cereals with a $5 million effort promoting Post Grape-Nuts cereal as a mix-in for hot oatmeal.

The campaign will run during the first quarter of the year, which accounts for 40% of yearly hot cereal consumption.

If the effort is successful, General Foods will make the approach central to the brand's advertising in 1989. The marketer spends about $20 million on Grape-Nuts advertising annually.

Created by Grey Advertising, New York, the network TV spot urges consumers to "oooomph up" their oatmeal by adding "the crunchy, nutty taste" of Grape-Nuts. It shows a plain bowl of oatmeal turning bright red and revving up like a car when Grape-Nuts, made of wheat and barley, is added.

The bowl then zooms away and stops with a screech before a box of the cereal.

"People eat oatmeal because they know it's good for them," said Carolyn Carter, senior VP-management supervisor on the General Foods account at Grey. "But most people say it's dull and boring or that it tastes like wallpaper paste."

The new Grape-Nuts effort features Peggy Smithheart, the female half of the bantering Grape-Nuts team that's been promoting the cereal since mid-1986.

General Foods' Post division has no entry in the hot cereal category, where sales grew about 24% in 1987 to $606 million, and are still climbing.

Helped by ad spending of almost $100 million from Quaker Oats Co. and General Mills (AA, Aug. 15), oat bran has benefited from reports that the substance may lower cholesterol and decrease blood pressure.

"People eat oatmeal because they know it's good for them. But most people say it's dull and boring or that it tastes like wallpaper paste."

Cold cereals have also benefited from oat bran's popularity, with entries such as Kellogg Co.'s Cracklin' Oat Bran and Common Sense Oat Bran; Quaker Oat Squares; General Mills' Oatmeal Raisin Crisp; and General Foods' Post Oat Flakes.

Oat cereals in August accounted for 6.4% of the $5 billion ready-to-eat cereal category, up about 8% from August 1987.

"There are already four to six new oat bran facings in stores," said Ms. Carter, who predicted two or three more entries in 1989.

Ms. Carter declined to give sales figures but said that Post Oat Flakes, an old brand that was reintroduced in late November, "is wildly beyond our sales projections."

Oat Flakes may also help General Foods' position in the category, where the 12.2% market share for its Post division limps behind Kellogg's 42% and General Mills' 20.5%.

General Foods' share is up slightly from 1987, but the company has lagged in new-product introductions in the hotly competitive category.

Grape-Nuts held a 1.8% share of the ready-to-eat category in 1987, about even with more healthful entries such as Kellogg's Nutri-Grain, said John Maxwell, Wheat First Securities analyst.

Toothbrush, floss unveiled

J&J polishes up new push at kids

By LAURIE FREEMAN

Johnson & Johnson's Dental Care Co., hoping New Year's resolutions include daily toothbrushing and flossing, this month introduces two oral-care products for children.

An estimated $6 million consumer and professional ad budget backs the launch of Prevent JR tooth and gum brush, a child-size version of its Prevent adult toothbrush, and Johnson & Johnson Dental Floss for Kids, targeted to children 12 and younger.

"There are 23 million kids in the 6-to-12 ad bracket," said Bill Berry, Prevent product director-professional business. "We hope that if we get them started early enough, we can maintain brand loyalty [to J&J's oral-care line] as they get older."

Prevent JR will be positioned as being ideal for teaching kids under age 12 the 45-degree brushing technique most recommended by dentists. J&J expects the product will slightly increase Prevent toothbrush's market share.

Prevent, introduced in 1988, has almost a 3% share of the $250 million brush segment. That's far behind leaders Oral-B, from Gillette Co., and J&J's Reach, each of which has about a 23% share.

Dental Floss for Kids is pink and has a bubble gum flavor. The waxed floss is the latest addition to J&J's floss line, which already dominates the $57 million segment.

Mr. Berry said ads emphasizing proper flossing and brushing techniques will break in February.

J&J is backing the introduction with a network TV and print campaign, extensive professional advertising, a direct-mail and sampling program, and couponing.

Lowe Marschalk, New York, is handling consumer advertising for Prevent and J&J's dental floss line. Gross Townsend Frank Hoffman is Prevent's professional ad agency; KPR Infor/Media is handling professional advertising of Dental Floss For Kids.

Kids-only products are the fastest-growing segment of the $1.5 billion oral-care category. By the end of 1988, every major toothpaste marketer had launched a kids-only toothpaste variety.#

How Della Femina won Pan Am

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—Della Femina, McNamee/WCRS, after merging its way into the top 20 U.S. agencies last year, has put itself firmly into the big leagues by landing Pan American World Airways' $55 million account over formidable competition.

"This is what the merger was all about," said agency founder Jerry Della Femina after his shop's biggest-ever win last week. "It's made us one of the agencies to be reckoned with."

Both Della Femina and Grey Advertising, which was awarded the $10 million Pan Am shuttle account, said creative work, and lots of it, did the trick. And some of the speculative work had to be done on short notice, with assignments coming in to the agencies via facsimile machines to simulate the quick turnaround often required by the airline industry.

Both accounts previously had been handled by Wells, Rich, Greene, which resigned the business rather than participate in the review (AA, Oct. 31).

Agency compensation, generally low for airline accounts, wasn't a factor, despite rumors that Pan Am intended to pay its agencies somewhere in the 9% range, sources said. Della Femina hasn't arrived at a compensation agreement; Grey said it has reached a "fair" arrangement with the airline.

J. Della Femina

Neither Della Femina nor Grey could say when they will be able to get new campaigns up and running because the company's management is preoccupied with the aftermath of the Dec. 21 crash of a Pan Am jet in Scotland.

Pan Am selected Della Femina over Ogilvy & Mather and D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles. It chose Grey in a review that also included the Bloom Agency, Ketchum/Hicks & Greist and Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein. Ogilvy and Lord Geller were the finalists in their respective fields.

"We showed them a lot of advertising," said Edward Tedeschi, general manager of Della Femina, adding that "culturally we were very different from Ogilvy or D'Arcy. That was good.

"Our strategy was [to win the account] with ideas, not an organization chart. We didn't say, 'We're a big agency. We can do the job. Trust us.' We gave them a lot of different campaigns. We felt they hadn't seen a lot of stuff from Wells."

Grey Senior VP Robert Ravitz, who will head the agency team on the Pan Am shuttle account, said Grey's pitch also offered a number of campaigns.

"We must have presented eight different creative ideas," Mr. Ravitz said. The ideas represented "a range of responses to the current environment and the anticipated Trump environment." Real estate mogul Donald Trump has agreed to buy rival Eastern Air Lines' Air Shuttle.

Some of Pan Am's simulated assignments, sent via Della Femina's fax machines, ruined a few weekends. But the agency said the last-minute assignments, which involved

Bayer shifts tactics

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Aspirin marketers are once again emphasizing pain relief in their ads, as an expected sales boost from publicity on heart-attack prevention failed to materialize.

Sterling Drug's Bayer, a name synonymous with aspirin, has launched new ads that stress its general pain relief benefits.

Although Sterling, a unit of Eastman Kodak Co., never abandoned pain relief, in recent years it had advertised heavily that aspirin could help prevent second heart attacks.

Many industry executives expected aspirin to benefit greatly from the much-publicized study last winter showing that men who used aspirin regularly could reduce the Japanese 'antenna shops' aid research

By DAVID KILBURN

TOKYO—Japanese marketers, always looking for new ideas, have come up with a creative solution to supplement traditional new-product research.

Rather than hiring a research company to send white-coated workers out to stores to ask questions, several big-name Japanese marketers are opening their own stores to learn what consumers think about new-product ideas.

Companies like Sony Corp., Nissan Motor Co., Fuji Film, Shiseido and Kao Corp. have opened such stores, called "antenna shops" because they, figuratively speaking, "broadcast" ideas to consumers.

Matsushita Electric Industrial Co.'s antenna, called Works, is filled with audio-visual gear and electrical appliances. Unlike most antenna stores, nothing is sold in this one. Instead, product ideas are discussed with customers.

So far, this antenna has helped develop Musica, a telephone with a built-in answering machine and alarm clock, marketed under the Panasonic name.

Musica, which costs about $300, also is built so that a personal portable stereo can be plugged into it, allowing music to enhance phone conversations.

Matsushita is also collecting information on its concept for a 21st century living room, which could

Toyota teases with first Lexus consumer ads

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Like a timed road rally, Toyota Motor Sales USA's Lexus division plans to pace its ads leading to the sales introduction of its luxury cars next fall.

"It's much like a striptease," said David Wagger, president of Saatchi & Saatchi Team One, Torrance, Calif., Lexus' agency. "We don't want so much exposure that when we introduce [the cars] it becomes a ho-hum thing."

The first consumer ads for Lexus will break Jan. 6 in conjunction with the Detroit and Los Angeles auto shows, if a trademark lawsuit challenging the division's name is settled in time (AA, Dec. 19).

In the initial ads, Lexus will show only small portions of its two new cars, such as a close-up of a fender.

"This look makes the car appear like a piece of art," Mr. Wagger said. "It's a clear, uncluttered, upscale look."

The message is intentionally brief. "We don't want to talk about the phenomenally smooth ride, for example, nine months before the cars are driveable," said Scott Gilbert, S&S Team One senior VP-management supervisor.

The first ads will run nationally as spreads in The Wall Street Journal and USA Today and locally as page ads in the Los Angeles Times and Detroit Free Press. All the ads will carry the headline: "See a car ahead of its time. Ahead of its time."

The copy begins: "The much-anticipated official world debut of the automobiles known as Lexus won't take place in showrooms until September 1989. But you can see one much sooner. Because today, and over the next few months, Lexus will be unveiled at auto shows in 11 cities across the U.S."

Lexus will place newspaper ads in conjunction with each of the auto shows.

Beginning in early spring, Lexus plans to run a series of ads highlighting the technology and design of the vehicles in most of the automotive buff books.

Consumers can call a toll-free number to get an eight-page brochure on the cars. The brochure says Toyota approached the design of the Lexus vehicles as a blank piece of paper, allowing designers to create "a new class of car." Unlike the ads, the brochure offers sketches of the top-of-the-line LS400 sedan and the smaller ES250.

Have holiday sales lost punch?

An Advertising Age roundup

Christmas shopping may be losing its glitter.

While holiday sales remain crucial to retailers, some merchants and consultants are asking whether this period is missing the strong kick of previous years.

"We're not going to see Christmas have the same effect as it used to," said Carol Farmer, president of Carol Farmer Associates, her own retail marketing consultancy in New York. "The commercial formulas just aren't working anymore."

Although final figures aren't yet available, analysts estimate merchants racked up average sales gains of about 5% to 7% for fourth-quarter 1988 compared with a year earlier. But the 1987 period included the October stock market tumble, which skewed it downward.

In fact, fourth-quarter general merchandise, apparel and furniture sales, a measure of Christmas pizazz, have declined steadily since a 12.5% gain in 1983, falling to 7.8% in 1984, 7% in 1985, 6.7% in 1986 and 5.5% in 1987, according to the National Retail Merchants Association.

Ms. Farmer said the breakup of family structure and time pressures have made the holidays a stressful time.

"To hinge the year on Christmas just doesn't make much sense anymore for retailers," she said.

Another problem may be that retailers' holiday marketing ideas are looking stale. Even the last new promotional idea—the "purchase-with-purchase" tactic that allows consumers who spend a certain amount to buy another item at a discount—has lost its steam.

"A lot of this stuff is getting pretty tired," said Richard Padulo, president of Padulo & Associates, a Canadian retail agency, referring to the U.S.

But many merchants, which have traditionally depended on holiday sales for as much as 50% of their yearly profits, disagree.

They point to this holiday period as evidence the season is still merry.

"We're very pleased," said Julian Taub, senior VP, Bloomingdale's, noting that the chain achieved a 30%-plus increase in the week before Christmas, as expected. However, he admitted Bloomies has more inventory than it wanted, and will be "very adequately covered" for post-Christmas and New Year's clearance sales.

"We're just where we projected: about a 6% increase during the Christmas selling season" said Michael Wellman, VP-marketing, K mart Corp. He called the chain's "Christmas in America" theme "very successful" and said K mart would use it again in 1989.

"What makes it nice . . . is the fact that we'll do more planning, maybe have some products or other events to tie into it," Mr. Wellman said.

In Minneapolis, Dayton Hudson Department Store Co. expected "to end December on a high note," said Cindy Schlosser, director of public relations. She added that the chain achieved a double-digit gain for the month.

While Dayton Hudson's inventory isn't "picked to the bone, consumers won't see full January sales racks like they did" a year ago, she said.

In Chicago, Sears, Roebuck & Co. said sales exceeded expectations, and gave credit to its massive holiday ad campaign via Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago.

"Christmas continues to be a great sales period for us, year after year," said Ernest Arms, news director for Sears Merchandise Group, adding that women's apparel, large appliances, big-screen TVs, video camcorders and merchandise tied to the Walt Disney Co. movie "Oliver & Co." performed well.

Across town, Marshall Field's reported double-digit sales increases, an improvement from Christmas 1987's single-digit increases.

Kassie Davis, VP-public affairs, attributed strong sales to Field's renovation of its flagship Chicago stores, a pickup in business at Texas stores and a "somewhat stronger" print advertising program, including more double-truck run-of-press ads than usual and heavy advertising in the Chicago Tribune's Sunday magazine.

In Texas, J.C. Penney Co. was encouraged by a pickup in business the week before Christmas, but still wasn't sure it had met its goal of a 4% sales gain.

As customers returned to the stores after the holidays, they could expect to find clearance sales, but less merchandise than they did at sales a year ago. That's because in-

Catalog sales fill the bill

By ALISON FAHEY

While retailers grappled with relatively lackluster sales this holiday season, many major catalogers had a merrier Christmas.

Their winning combination: convenience and strong customer service, designed to appeal to customers tired of crowded stores.

"This is probably the best Christmas we've ever had," said Rob Longendyke, public relations manager at Spiegel, where sales were up about 10% from the 1987 holiday season.

"Business has come around very nicely since Thanksgiving. . . . We've seen a trend throughout the past few years that Christmas [ordering] keeps getting pushed back farther," he said.

To accommodate late shoppers and compete with stores at the season's crucial close, several catalogers introduced new and quicker delivery programs in association with overnight carriers.

For its last-minute shoppers, Spiegel added a quick delivery feature for its catalog customers. For no extra charge, the company guaranteed orders taken by 5 p.m. (ET) on Dec. 20 would arrive before Christmas.

The promotion paid off. "A surge in last-minute orders [peaking on Dec. 19] fueled a lot of our strong results," said Bill Ligas, corporate communications specialist.

Spiegel mailed its major Christmas book to nearly 5 million households on Sept. 1. A smaller book, themed "Great Ideas Gift Catalog," followed in October to a more selective group of customers.

At J.C. Penney Co., "the catalog business, in terms of percentages of sales, is doing better than the stores," said Duncan Muir, public relations manager.

The company, which mails its Christmas catalog in late August, reaped "double-digit sales gains" this holiday season, Mr. Muir said.

The company attributed the sales gains to improved customer service stemming from technological advances in phone ordering and 48-hour delivery service.

Despite management turnover during the year at Bloomingdale's by Mail, "sales were excellent," said Glen Senk, senior VP.

Bloomingdale's mailed its major Christmas catalog in late September to 4 million households, followed by three holiday-related books devoted to single merchandise categories.

In some instances, specialty catalogers fared even better than general merchandisers.

Cooking and serving equipment cataloger Williams-Sonoma, San Francisco, expected holiday sales to increase about 20%, said Patrick Connolly, VP-mail order.

"This year we were concerned [about sales] until November," when business really turned around, he said.

At toy retailer FAO Schwarz, "the catalog is the biggest surprise of all. . . . It has held up longer and been strong longer than any of us imagined," said President Peter Harris. He declined to disclose sales figures.

Sales for FAO Schwarz's Christmas catalog, resurrected in 1987 after a hiatus of several years, peaked just after Thanksgiving, more than two months after its September mailing.#

Cafeteria lineup

New Furr's ads push quality, value

By CHRISTY FISHER

Furr's/Bishop's Cafeterias hopes its new ad campaign will take at least a small bite out of the national restaurant market.

The No. 2 chain in the cafeteria category early this year will air 10 15-second TV spots in all 47 of its markets. Some of the spots broke last month in nine Southwestern locations.

The commercials, paired together as split :30s, emphasize the cafeteria's quality, variety and value by pointing out competitors' shortcomings.

In at least two spots, Furr's/Bishop's boasts that it doesn't use microwave ovens to cook food, and all the commercials conclude with the new tagline: "Food this good takes all day."

Levenson, Levenson & Hill, Irving, Texas, handles the estimated $7 million account.

"This is the most full-blown multifaceted attack plan we have taken to date under the new ownership," said Rich Lahvic, Furr's/Bishop's marketing director. "We're looking at expanding our share in the restaurant market, with the cafeteria market as a subobjective."

Picking up even a fraction of a percentage of the national restaurant market would have "a tremendous effect on sales," he said.

The National Restaurant Association estimates the total national restaurant market at $213.5 billion and the cafeteria category at $4 billion.

Furr's/Bishop's sales in 1988 were expected to total $271 million, up 5.9% from 1987.

The company's strategy also involves new products to lure young adults and families away from fast-food restaurants.

The chain has implemented all-you-can-eat specials and a specially priced children's menu. It's testing carryout and plans to offer drive-through carryout windows for convenience.

"We're looking to expand our guest base to attract the younger-than-45 heads of household while maintaining our market share with the 45-plus market," Mr. Lahvic said.

Since the company was purchased by Michael Levenson in a leveraged buyout from K mart Corp. in December 1986 and subsequently taken public in a partnership, management has sought new ways to approach what some say is a stodgy business stuck in its ways.

"Cafeterias don't tend to be big advertisers," said John Hunt, an analyst with Smith Barney. "In the past, they have not had to be. Competition has not been as tough."

Analysts and cafeteria operators believe Furr's/Bishop's aggressive positioning will spur competitors to respond.

"We're not as aggressive as we should be. But we are now making strides to be more aggressive," said Bill Cotterill, marketing director of family dining for Morrison Inc., whose Morrison's Family Dining is the U.S.' No. 1 cafeteria chain with fiscal 1988 sales of $291.1 million (including seven Sady's buffet units).

"This is somewhat in response to Furr's. . . . With the heavier competition, I think we'll see more aggressive advertising efforts. The whole midscale family-dining segment has gotten so large and competitive, [restaurateurs] have to find ways to keep top of mind with consumers."

A. Richard Johnson, Nashville, Tenn., is Morrison's agency.

Luby's Cafeterias, the third-largest chain with fiscal 1988 sales of $254.3 million, plans to stick with local sponsorships and word-of-mouth advertising. Print ads support new store openings. Anderson Advertising, San Antonio, Texas, is the agency.

"We try to do things better and improve our own operations," said Bud Schrader, Luby's VP-marketing. "We find that the best way to fight competition."

Picadilly Cafeterias, the No. 4 chain, spends $2 million to $3 million a year on advertising. Creative is handled in-house. Bauerlein Inc., New Orleans, handles media.

"Marketing is critical but there is more to marketing than just spending more money on advertising," said Brian Von Gruben, Picadilly exec VP-director of administrative services.

He indicated that location, product quality and word-of-mouth advertising still are strong traffic builders. The company's fiscal 1988 sales totaled $234.5 million.

Wyatt Cafeterias, the fifth-largest cafeteria chain, plans to increase 1989 ad spending, said Debra Hand, marketing director. Wyatt's is handled in-house. She declined to reveal budget figures.

Sales for 1988 are estimated at $175 million.#

Church's maps out turnaround

By CHRISTY FISHER

While fending off a hostile tender offer, Ernest Renaud is forging ahead with his plan to rejuvenate Church's Fried Chicken.

In an interview with ADVERTISING AGE, Mr. Renaud, Church's 61-year-old president-ceo, outlined his marketing strategy to reverse declines in revenues and profits.

The most pressing challenge he faces is convincing shareholders and franchisees that they will benefit by keeping the company independent.

Mr. Renaud is fighting what he is calling an "inadequate" $8-a-share bid from A. Copeland Enterprises, corporate parent of No. 3 Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken & Biscuits.

In the past 52 weeks, Church's stock has traded as high as $8.50 and as low as $5.63.

Currently, the stock is trading at about $7.60, but Mr. Renaud, who joined the company in late June, hopes to convince shareholders that they can get more for their shares by sticking with the company.

The No. 2 chicken chain is negotiating with third parties and studying other alternatives to maximize shareholder value.

Mr. Renaud expects 1988 company sales to fall below $400 million. But his goal is to boost sales to $420 million in 1989 and $500 million to $600 million in the next five or six years.

Mr. Renaud wouldn't make a projection on systemwide sales, which include franchise revenues, but they were $533.8 million in 1987.

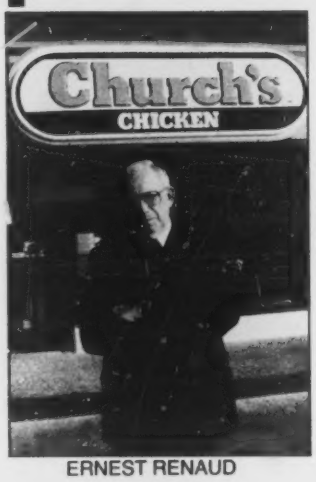
He said he plans to increase per-store average sales 5% to 7% annually during the next four years. In 1987, systemwide sales per unit averaged $357,000, compared with average per-unit sales of about $725,000 at Popeyes.

For the first nine months of last year, Church's posted earnings of $2.1 million, down 73% from the same period in 1987. Sales rose 4% to $290.7 million.

In addition to shuttering 120 of its 1,475 restaurants, a move disclosed last month, Mr. Renaud plans to open 30 to 40 company-owned stores and 60 to 80 franchises a year, and remodel existing restaurants. This year, he plans to spend about $45 million on capital spending and in-store improvements.

Improved product quality and customer service will be a priority, as will new-product development. The company also will hike its ad budget by about 54%.

Under Mr. Renaud's plan, franchisees would make up about 45% of the store base, instead of their current 22% portion.



ERNEST RENAUD

"From my background, franchises are very, very important," said Mr. Renaud, who most recently spent 2½ years leading a holding company for both Golden Corral Corp. and 29 Church's franchises.

For 13 years before that, he was president-ceo of Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes' corporate parent, Jerrico.

Church's also plans to be more aggressive about expanding into suburban areas, from its traditional inner-city base.

Church's menu also will be freshened up, said Mr. Renaud, who plans to add one new product a year. He's also going to add 400 new fryers to help improve product quality.

"I plan to keep a tight menu," he said. "But I think a restaurant should keep customers' expectations alive by doing something a little different every year."

Whether Mr. Renaud gets a chance to implement these changes depends on the shareholders and the courts.

Church's is challenging Copeland Enterprises' tender offer on antitrust grounds and on grounds that information used to make the bid allegedly was obtained from former Church's executives who now work at Popeyes.

Copeland has filed a suit challenging the legality of Church's shareholders rights plan that's designed to foil the Copeland takeover. Hearings for both cases will be held this month.

Copeland has extended the deadline on its tender offer until Jan. 5, but a court has ordered that no action be taken on the offer until at least Jan. 12.

To date, 14.9 million, or 41%, of Church's 36.6 million outstanding shares have been tendered.

Meanwhile, Mr. Renaud and his management team are trying to rally shareholders and franchisees around the new game plan.

"I think it [a turnaround] can be done, but I need time," Mr. Renaud said. "I do not believe in knee-jerk. I promised the board that by the middle of next year they will see heavy progress."

Mr. Renaud plans to support stores with an enlarged marketing field staff and an extensive ad campaign. He has increased the ad budget to 5% of sales from 2.8% and plans to spend about $20 million in measured media in 1989—a 54% increase from 1988.

Church's intends to keep its low-cost positioning and its "Big pieces. Little prices" tagline, created by the Bloom Agency, Dallas.

Bloom and Church's parted this fall (AA, Oct. 31). Church's now "boutiques out" its creative work, Mr. Renaud said. Its media is handled by Western International Media.

Joseph J. Doyle, an analyst with Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., said Mr. Renaud's strategy "looks like a good generic plan. But it's the execution of the plan, not the development of it, that is the more difficult thing to do."# rate changes and asked for reactions to new-product offerings by the competition, simulated real-life situations.

Della Femina began wooing Pan Am after the agency was formed in the June merger of Della Femina, Travisano & Partners and HBM/Creamer. Both agencies were bought in 1986 by London-based WCRS Group.

"Now we're going to get looked at by every large account because we've got the size and we've got the people," Mr. Della Femina said.

The win is also important for WCRS, which has been under pressure to prove that its network was perceived as viable by multinational advertisers.

"WCRS hasn't seemed to have a lot of friends lately, and it's been very quiet on the new-business front," said Sue Bailey, an analyst at Warburg Securities in London, where WCRS' finances have been questioned. "This should actually be quite a good boost for it. It could be that what [WCRS] has said, that you've got to be in the top 20 in billings, is paying off."

Staffers from WCRS in London and Belier/WCRS in Europe participated in the pitch.

Also involved were Jim Durfee, vice chairman-director of corporate creative services at Della Femina, and Jamie Seltzer, exec VP-creative director of the New York office. Both joined the agency in 1988 and had worked on Pan Am at Carl Ally Inc.

It's unclear when the carrier will resume its marketing activities following the explosion and crash that killed all 259 people on board the Dec. 21 flight.

One of the ad challenges facing Della Femina is that Pan Am's overall service isn't at the world-class standards of Air France, British Airways and Lufthansa, said Edward Starkman, airline analyst at PaineWebber.

"The big problem is not to oversell service on coach class," he said. "Advertising will have to make clear what Pan Am does, and that is take people across the North Atlantic. Ads should be destination-based rather than promoting getting feet rubbed and crystal chandeliers on the plane. If customers expect that, they will be disappointed."

Mr. Starkman said that Pan Am, the No. 1 North Atlantic carrier in terms of revenue passenger miles, is showing some improvement financially, after years of decline.#

Benefiting from buyback

Scali's move could also help out its parent, Ogilvy

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—A plan by Scali, McCabe, Sloves to regain majority control of the agency from Ogilvy Group has observers wondering which organization will gain the most from a potential deal.

About 28 Scali managers already own 20% of the shop, as part of a buyback plan begun in 1986, and are expected to exercise an option to buy another 10% early this year.

But the agency is hungry for more, and in this case, its goals appear to mesh with those of its parent.

In the most likely of several options being explored, Scali and Ogilvy will seek a financial partner to buy 40% of the agency, subject to approval by Ogilvy's board (AA, Dec. 26).

The shares already owned by Scali managers would then be acquired by Abbott Mead Vickers/SMS, a London-based affiliate that is 25%-owned by Scali, which in turn may issue a public offering on London's stock exchange.

If no suitable partner is found or Scali decides not to pursue a public offering, it may simply continue the process of acquiring small shares in the agency, leaving Ogilvy as the majority owner.

Kenneth Roman, Ogilvy chairman-ceo, was vacationing last week and unavailable for comment on Scali buyback plans. Marvin Sloves, Scali chairman, also couldn't be reached. Earlier, he confirmed basic details of the talks but declined to elaborate.

Acquired by Ogilvy in 1977, Scali is seeking independence apparently because it wants greater financial flexibility to acquire and build a global network at a time when its parent faces severe earnings pressures and resulting cost control measures.

For Ogilvy, the sale of a greater stake in Scali fits its strategy of winnowing smaller agencies from its ranks while focusing on direct-marketing, research and other marketing-services companies.

From a financial standpoint, analysts say an investment partner or future U.K. public offering of Scali would enable Ogilvy to give Scali executives their independence without lending them the cost of the buyback or losing money on the deal.

And a cash infusion would help stem profit pressures at Ogilvy Group, whose estimated 8% profit margin in 1988 falls below the industry average.

Those pressures appear to be causing the group's board concern about unfriendly takeover rumors (AA, Dec. 26).

Ogilvy loaned $3.3 million in 1986 to SMS Management Investment Co., a limited partnership formed by the 28 managers who used the money to buy 15% of Scali. That loan is due in 1992, and Scali has since acquired another 5%.

"The trend toward Ogilvy deconsolidating, or selling pieces that don't fit, wouldn't be that surprising in light of what's taken place already," said Andrew Wallach, analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert.

He noted that Ogilvy has already sold back interests in the Ball Partnership and Ogilvy & Mather's San Francisco office, which became Hal Riney & Partners after Mr. Riney virtually threatened to leave the agency if he couldn't buy it.

"Hal Riney put egg on Ogilvy's face," said Emma Hill of Wertheim, Schroder & Co., adding that Ogilvy got less than the true market value of the office. "They would argue that they had no choice, but [the sale] was not a good deal for public shareholders."

The expansion of Scali's own operations has proved only partly successful. The agency opened offices in Canada and Australia and acquired interests in the London agency and others in Mexico, West Germany, France, Spain and the Netherlands.

It bought majority control of two agencies widely considered creative success stories, Fallon McElligott in Minneapolis and the Martin Agency in Richmond, Va. But a top executive from each of these shops resigned in recent months, raising questions about their future, despite recent new-business gains.

Two domestic offices under the Scali banner —in Atlanta and Los Angeles—were shuttered less than two years after they opened, leading Mr. Sloves to seek out other "creative boutiques," particularly those on the West Coast.

Scali, whose largest clients include Hertz Corp. and Perdue Farms, earned gross income of $93.1 million in 1987, a 20.1% gain, on worldwide billings of $653.2 million, up 17.2% from 1986.

Billings for 1988 are expected to exceed $750 million, and the agency's relatively low overhead, with fewer offices, is believed to make it more profitable than similarly sized shops.#

MAXWELL'S MARKET SHARES

Cigarette sales decline in '88

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Philip Morris USA was the only cigarette company to show unit sales gains in 1988, according to preliminary estimates.

Industry shipments as a whole were expected to be off about 2.4% for the year.

Philip Morris' sales were expected to be up about 1.6%, increasing its industry share to 39.3%. The Marlboro brand (which added Marlboro Lights menthol in 1988) now accounts for close to 25% of industry sales.

The company also showed gains for Virginia Slims Ultra Lights and Cambridge.

The R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. unit of RJR Nabisco, the No. 2 cigarette marketer, suffered its first market share decline in five years, dipping 0.7%.

Winston and Salem, Nos. 2 and 3 among individual brands, both were expected to record lower unit sales.

Among the top 10 brands, Newport and Camel moved up a notch from 1987, to fifth and sixth place, as Benson & Hedges slipped to seventh. Doral moved from 10th to ninth, ahead of Virginia Slims.#

Publishers venture south

Magazines test Latin waters

By LESLIE GILBERT

Latin America is a distribution nightmare that's kept many foreign magazine publishers from diving in, but some are getting serious about it now.

Dow Jones & Co., which several years ago considered and dropped the idea of publishing a separate Latin American edition of The Wall Street Journal, now has expanded its America Economia's reach into Mexico.

The magazine, a joint venture with two private individuals in Chile, is available in 10 Latin American nations.

Last October, the U.K.'s EuroMoney Publications Group introduced LatinFinance, a slick, Miami-based magazine published 10 times a year for those emerging from the 1982 Latin American debt crisis.

Early this year, Time will upgrade to glossy paper stock and color printing for its Latin American editions.

Sister publication Fortune is currently negotiating a joint venture in Spain with Hachette and could take that project to Latin America.

Circulation of Fortune's English-language international edition in Latin America is estimated at 12,460. And International Advertising Director Michael Dudler said that "a Spanish-language edition for Spain would probably have applications ... for the Spanish-speaking market in South America."

As Latin American nations have rebuilt dying economies, the business community has grown stronger and more sophisticated, said Nels Strandberg, publisher of America Economia.

Dow Jones entered the market in mid-1987 with the Spanish-language business magazine, started by Mr. Strandberg and Elias Selman, a Chilean market researcher.

Circulation for the Santiago-based magazine is estimated at 40,000, with 7,000 paid, Mr. Strandberg said.

Despite the expansion, Bob Paradise, VP of Dow Jones' magazine group, cautioned, "America Economia is not a test market for The Wall Street Journal. They are too dissimilar."

One of the region's problems is that distribution is expensive.

"Traditionally, it's been a very costly market to develop circulation. We do very well when we promote [to gain circulation], but it's just a question of priorities," said Dee Fernandes, VP-The Americas for South Publications. English-language South, a monthly magazine, is targeted at executives doing business in developing countries.

One publication that does well in Latin America is Time.

Its Latin American edition is published in English, and executives estimate circulation at 90,000—all paid—with about one-third of its readership in Brazil.

But Time has no plans to introduce a Spanish-language edition. "English is a self-selecting targeting tool," said Kevin Weafer, managing director of the Americas.

U.S. and European publishers seem willing to leave many readers to Vision, a 200,000-plus circulation Spanish-language news magazine published every other week in Mexico.#

Several magazine publishers are concentrating on the Latin American market, including Dow Jones & Co.'s America Economia.

Aspirin marketers push pain relief risk of heart attacks.

Companies were forbidden from advertising the first-attack study, but industry analysts and even government officials expected aspirin would get a rub-off effect from the second heart attack ads.

Instead, Bayer sales slipped, and the overall aspirin market actually declined 1.4% to 296 million units for the 12 months ended October 1988, according to Nielsen Marketing Research Group. Only dollar sales increased, by 6% to $839 million.

"I think there will be more focus on [pain relief] advertising," said Elliot Dorfman, senior VP-management supervisor at Lintas:New York, Bayer's agency.

"From a strategic point of view, general pain usage represents greater potential for the brand," he said. "The heart attack message is important, but in terms of usage, general pain relief is where the volume still exists."

The new drive uses Bayer's longtime "The wonder drug that works wonders" theme. The TV spot that began airing in December features explorer Andrew Harvard, who says he includes Bayer on his list of expedition essentials.

Bayer was the first to jump on the second heart attack angle and was instrumental in gaining government approval for that claim in 1985.

Bristol-Myers Co.'s Bufferin and SmithKline Beckman Corp.'s Ecotrin also advertised for the prevention of second heart attacks.

The other big player in the market, American Home Products Corp.'s Anacin, never did, maintaining its pain relief claim.

Painkillers containing ibuprofen, such as American Home's Advil and Bristol-Myer's Nuprin, continued to be the thorn in aspirin's side.

Nielsen figures show that ibuprofen continued its meteoric rise through October, gaining 20% in sales to $402 million, with units expanding 14% to 102 million.

Ibuprofen's share of the total $2.4 billion retail analgesic market has risen to 21%, from 19%; aspirin is at 42%, from 44%; and acetominophen, such as Johnson & Johnson's Tylenol, remains at about 36%.

"The winner continues to be ibuprofen," said Neil Sweig, drug industry analyst for Prudential-Bache Research.

Further complicating aspirin's future growth is the general consensus that the Food & Drug Administration probably won't allow consumer advertising of the first-attack claim.

The FDA has been examining the National Institutes of Health study for nearly a year now, and industry executives said the agency probably will allow the claim only to doctors in professional journals.

Analysts say the FDA is unlikely to allow unhindered consumer advertising of aspirin as a heart attack preventative because of the risk of side effects, such as stomach problems.

Others say the FDA might allow aspirin to be promoted in general consumer "health information" ads that suggest a doctor's visit if concerned about heart health.

"The FDA is not comfortable with what the [direct consumer] ads are supposed to read, and they've not been good and ready" to announce a position, Mr. Sweig said. "But now, as many months have gone by, aspirin marketers have come to understand that it [the NIH study] may turn out to be a moderate positive. ...

"The key [to real growth] is to prevent first heart attacks."

He predicted the FDA will approve some sort of first heart attack claim for aspirin this year, but consumer advertising would only be allowed with caveats.

"There's too many potential side effects for daily use," he said. "I don't see as bright a future for aspirin sales" as for competitors.#

ventory levels were leaner to begin with, said J. Duncan Muir, public relations program manager.

On the West Coast, Mervyn's, a 213-store chain, experienced sales only slightly above a year ago, but a spokesman declined to give specifics. On Christmas Eve the chain opened at 7 a.m. and ran a three-hour promotion featuring an additional 10% off jewelry already discounted 20%.

In San Francisco, Emporium Capwell Co. said Christmas sales improved by more than 6%. The chain stuck to its promotional calendar, but its discounts weren't as steep as a year ago, said Alice MacNaughton, VP-sales promotion.

Consultants see a tough year ahead.

"The plain truth is the honeymoon [for retailers] is over," said William Ress, president of C.W. Ress & Co., a retail consultancy. "With few exceptions, retail has become a flat business and will be for the rest of this century."

The key factors driving the long-term growth of the retail industry—population growth, the rise of the two-income family and the credit-card explosion—have trailed off and no new expansionary forces have replaced them, Mr. Ress said.

In contrast with the self-indulgence of the mid-1980s, "consumers are buying only things they truly need and want and believe have value," said Kurt Barnard, retail consultant and publisher, Retail Marketing Report.

"It's not that consumers expect to spend less overall, it's that they're trying to get the most value for their dollar," said Leo Shapiro, chairman of Leo J. Shapiro & Associates.#

Sara Lee realigns $100M in Europe

By LAUREL WENTZ
and JULIE SKUR HILL

In a major realignment, Sara Lee Corp.'s European coffee and groceries unit is reshuffling its $100 million ad budget and slicing its roster of agencies to four from more than 40.

The Sara Lee/Douwe Egberts division, based in Utrecht, Netherlands, is aligning its business by product category in about a dozen European countries.

The winning agencies are BBDO Worldwide, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, HDM Worldwide and Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide.

BBDO grabbed the two biggest-spending product groups—coffee and tobacco—while Saatchi won teas and snacks and HDM picked up oral-care and detergent products.

The Sara Lee division began the consolidation several months ago, moving two European over-the-counter brands, Rennies antacid and Aspro aspirin, to Backer.

At press time, the exact size of each agency's win was not clear because of the disparate nature and number of brands involved. It is known, however, that BBDO's portion of the business is worth $30 million.

FHV/BBDO Group, Amstelveen, the Netherlands, will serve as the lead agency for the account.

The realignment was spurred, in part, by the creation by 1992—the target date for the European Community to eliminate trade barriers.

"European branding means European advertising, and European advertising means you may as well use [pan-European] agencies," said Wim Slootweg, senior VP-international communication at Sara Lee. Mr. Sloot-

Winn-Dixie, food giants mend fences

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON
and JUDANN DAGNOLI

The standoff between Winn-Dixie Stores and some of the nation's largest grocery-product marketers seems to be ending.

Products of companies including General Foods Corp., Pillsbury Co., Procter & Gamble Co. and Quaker Oats Co. are being returned to Winn-Dixie shelves as a result of individual deals with the retail chain.

Although two of these companies are modifying marketing policies, others report little or no change.

General Foods and Quaker have instituted new national pricing policies, but both companies are fashioning them to facilitate regional marketing.

The brouhaha over national deals came to a head last summer as Winn-Dixie, the fifth-largest grocery chain in the U.S. with 1,300 units, began demanding that deals from marketers could no longer be offered on a market-by-market basis (AA, Oct. 3, et seq.). When marketers refused, the chain began pulling selected products from those companies.

After Winn-Dixie threw down the gauntlet, other supermarket chains, such as Food Lion, Publix Supermarkets, Safeway Stores and Kroger Food Stores, demanded equal treatment. Now the worst appears to be over.

Quaker is "reserving the right to market and promote certain products locally," particularly those that are regional or whose strengths skew dramatically to certain regions, said Ronald Bottrell, senior manager-corporate communications at the marketer.

The policy applies to hot and cold cereals and Gatorade, and was formulated before Winn-Dixie issued its demands, he said.

The chain appears to have accepted Quaker's position, since Quaker said its discontinued products have been reinstated by Winn-Dixie.

Some P&G and Pillsbury products pulled from Winn-Dixie also are beginning to reappear, indicating headway in negotiations between those two market-

American Airlines next month breaks this spot from BJK&E to emphasize its European routes to U.S. viewers.

American opens review

DDB, Bozell vie for $20M int'l account

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

FORT WORTH, TEXAS—American Airlines is reviewing its estimated $20 million international ad account in hopes of heightening its image abroad.

The nation's No. 2 carrier will choose between international incumbent DDB Needham Worldwide and Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, its domestic shop. No other agencies are participating in the review.

The review was prompted by the airline's rapid European expansion since 1985, said Jim Simon, managing director of advertising.

American's international routes cover service between four U.S. cities and nine European cities; four new European destinations will be added in May.

As recently as three years ago, American flew only to London.

DDB Needham, through its London and New York offices, handles ads that run in Belgium, France, West Germany, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the U.K. and Japan.

The agency will make a presentation here Jan. 11.

BJK&E presented its international capabilities two weeks ago after requesting the opportunity to do so. The agency wouldn't comment other than to acknowledge its participation in the review.

Mr. Simon said it will be important for the international agency to have a Dallas office. DDB Needham officials declined to speculate on whether it might set up shop in Dallas to keep the account.

Super Bowl beer bash

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Beer, soft drinks and automobiles will scramble for the advertising limelight at Super Bowl XXIII, while computers and financial services fade to the sidelines.

The key contest on NBC-TV's Jan. 22 telecast is between Anheuser-Busch, the game's single largest sponsor, and the cola companies, which are waging a marketing extravaganza of epic proportions—complete with the first-ever, three-dimensional network broadcast and TV commercial.

"The question is which of the promotions will capture the greatest consumer attention and interest," said an agency executive who asked not to be identified.

Angered by Stroh's Super Bowl spot last year mimicking Bud Light's Spuds MacKenzie, A-B has seized an 11-unit, $5 million buy, making it the exclusive beer sponsor and only exclusive sponsor for the game, as well as the pre- and postgame shows.

The showcase is a set of six new "Bud Bowl I" spots that enact the game in beer-land (AA, Dec. 26).

Meanwhile, Miller Brewing Co., an official National Football League sponsor shut out of the field, is still determined to get in the Super Bowl act. Miller will run a sweepstakes and distribute nearly 5 million copies of a 20-page game guide as well as T-shirts, hats, table tents, signs and other game-related items in stores.

On the cola front, Coca-Cola USA and Pepsi-Cola Co. reportedly have each grabbed four of the telecast's 54 30-second ad units. Coca-Cola's showcase will be a $1 million, 45-second Diet Coke spot in 3-D, via Lintas: New York. It will air during the 12-minute halftime show.

The marketer starts distributing 20 million pairs of 3-D glasses at point-of-purchase displays today, backed by local advertising.

Pepsi will premiere part of its 1989 commercial pool during the telecast, including a Diet Pepsi spot, sources said. BBDO Worldwide handles.

In an effort to upstage its rival, Pepsi is sponsoring "The Diet Pepsi Talent Challenge," a pregame talent show featuring NFL players competing as singers, comedians, dancers and musicians (AA, Dec. 19).

Among other Super Bowl XXIII advertisers:

- The auto category is bursting, with Volkswagen of America, Chrysler Motors' Dodge division (with three :30s or one :30 and one :60 via BBDO Worldwide, Southfield, Mich.); Nissan Motor Corp. USA; Hyundai Motor America; and Toyota Motor Sales USA each accounting for two or three units. The pre- and postgame shows also count General Motors Corp.'s Oldsmobile division, Suzuki Motor Corp. and Mazda Motor of America among their sponsors.
- McDonald's Corp. will air a special effort tied to a product anniversary, sources say.
- Federal Express Corp. will run several spots from a new campaign stressing international service, by Fallon McElligott, Minneapolis. Federal Express had five units on the game last year.
- Gillette Co. is running one :60 and two :30s for its Atra Plus blade-and-razor system. The company had one :30 on the pregame show last year. BBDO in New York handles.
- Michelin Tire Corp. is breaking two campaigns from DDB Needham Worldwide. One features the "best of babies," with scenes from Michelin's much-heralded spots of toddlers crawling around its tires. The other is a more hard-hitting, performance-related campaign.
- GM's Oldsmobile division is airing a :30

Indies to take on Big 3 in upfront

By WAYNE WALLEY

LOS ANGELES—The Association of Independent Television Stations said it will go head-to-head with the Big 3 TV networks, cable and barter syndication for a share of "upfront" sales by 1990.

Preston Padden, president of INTV, said at least 75 stations, including KCOP, Los Angeles, signed tentative commitments to join INTV-NET at the association's annual convention here last week. That's the first step in a four-phase plan to create a new "unwired" network.

The idea, first broached by INTV last month (AA, Dec. 12), is to unite independent stations on a non-exclusive basis for network sales of ad time during certain dayparts.

For the most part, independent stations have been excluded from the traditional upfront market, when advertisers make their TV buys as much as a year in advance.

"We have failed to get our fair share of network-type national dollars largely because we fail to show up and ask for the order," Mr. Padden said. "We do 25% of the national audience share but capture only 1% of the national revenue."

INTV wants to target the $11 billion spent by advertisers in the upfront market. But advertisers tend to perceive unwired networks as an expedient way to buy spot TV, the market independents depend on for at least half their annual revenue.

At least seven so-called unwired networks now exist, created by third parties who buy commercial time on independents nationwide and resell the time to advertisers at a markup.

"The trick for INTV is how to get there," said Dennis Gillespie, senior VP at Viacom International. "I give independents credit for developing a cooperative to get a share in the $11 billion upfront, but how do you get it without spot going out the back door? That's what they have to guard against."

Some in the TV industry believe unwired networks, particularly INTV-NET, will destroy the national spot TV marketplace.

But Ron Inman, INTV VP-marketing, said the plan gives independents the opportunity to build a larger revenue stream while giving national advertisers an efficient way to buy independents.

Advertisers generally applauded the formation of INTV-NET. If the price is right, they could use the venture as leverage in network negotiations or to compensate for increases in other areas.

"We would evaluate it in terms of an offsetting package against network," said Robert Ward, Miller Brewing Co. director of advertising services.

Robert L. Wehling, VP-marketing services at Procter & Gamble Co., said ease of administration, or a one-invoice buy, made his experience with an unwired network work.

"I think it's a good idea," he said of INTV-NET. "It will come down to pricing, time period and the quality of what they are offering."

Mr. Padden said INTV's next step is to find a sales company to represent the network, followed by getting signed agreements from stations and implementing a marketing plan.

LBS Communications and Viacom already have bid to become the sales rep.#

Interpublic, French shop discuss deal

By LAUREL WENTZ

Interpublic Group of Cos. and French agency network FCA! are talking about jointly buying a New York agency.

These negotiations also involve FCA! possibly purchasing some of McCann-Erickson Worldwide's secondary European agencies and McCann's acquiring 34% of FCA!

If the talks work out, FCA! and McCann would seek an agency in New York billing about $200 million to $300 million. However, no candidates have been selected, said Philippe Calleux, FCA! chief executive.

A decision on a deal with Interpublic, McCann's parent, will be made in about two months, he said. FCA! also is talking to other international agency groups, but he declined to name them.

Mr. Calleux said having his agency's name on the door in the U.S. and Europe is a key point.

"We would be stronger in Europe by merging some of [McCann's] agencies with our own, but obviously we're also highly interested in having an agency with our name in New York," he said. "We have very important clients looking for a U.S. solution."

FCA! already owns agencies in the U.K., Italy, Spain, the Netherlands and West Germany. The agency would be interested in picking up McCann shops in those countries as well as adding markets such as Scandinavia and Portugal, Mr. Calleux said.

McCann owns 14 local agencies in Europe that don't carry the McCann name and aren't an official network. Generally, local clients are handled by the group of shops, which include Harrisons and Royds in the U.K. and Clarin in Spain.

"This chain of [McCann] agencies is international orphans," Mr. Calleux said. "They have no coordination or common vision. There might be extraordinary synergy possible."

Also, "Our way of doing things would be different," he said.

But McCann Chairman Robert L. James played down the talks with FCA!

"We have had discussions with these people going back five years," he said. "We had them last year and will again in '89. But I don't call them negotiations. There is nothing imminent. It's not like something being negotiated down to a fine point."

Mr. James said the specifics mentioned by Mr. Calleux were "ele-

H&R Block ads rely on refunds

By KATE FITZGERALD

Ralph the school traffic guard is back in H&R Block's 1989 TV campaign, breaking today.

Ralph DeSarno, a guard in Old Tappan, N.J., made a strong impression on viewers last year with his off-the-cuff comments about tax reform. So H&R Block decided to let him conclude three of its four new 30-second TV spots.

Ralph the traffic guard returns in H&R Block's TV campaign.

"For some reason, Ralph was very memorable last year in his orange safety outfit, and we got some wonderful, natural quotes from him," said Marketing Director Steve Dickey.

The spots are part of H&R Block's $10 million 1989 ad effort, via Bernstein Rein, Kansas City, Mo. Media placement is handled in-house.

The company tried network TV in 1987 but was forced back to an all-spot-TV schedule last year when the Olympics created a shortage of network slots (AA, Jan. 11, 1988). H&R Block this year is sticking with a spot schedule, supported by print and radio.

The campaign again urges people to go for the biggest possible tax refund as tax reform fades to the background.

Each new commercial features Henry Bloch, the company's founder and president-ceo, who spells the company's name, and his own name in the spots, with a K.

Two 1988 commercials for H&R Block's Rapid Refund option also are in the six-spot pool. The option allows customers to file returns electronically and get refunds within five to seven days.

Rapid Refund, which involves an extra fee, is available in 54 markets, up from 14 last year. Mr. Dickey expects the option to account for 33% of H&R Block filings this year.

H&R Block, the nation's largest income tax preparer, processed 10.5 million taxpayers' returns last year, up 9.4% from 1987. Mr. Dickey said the company handled 10.6% of the nation's tax returns last year, up from 10% in 1987.#

Lights get flashy

Batteries marketers charge ahead

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Rayovac's new campaign will back an expanded line of flashlights.

Battery marketers will turn up the power of advertising again this year as two rivals switch their attention to flashlights.

On the heels of record 1988 ad spending by the major battery marketers, Rayovac Corp. introduces three flashlights nationally April 1. That's a direct challenge to Eveready Battery Co., which has begun a major relaunch of its lighting products (AA, Aug. 29).

Rayovac's new products—Flashylights, Roughneck and Tandem—along with its Luma 2 and Workhorse flashlights—will be supported initially by a multimedia campaign tied to Father's Day.

Ads will build toward the fourth quarter, when 40% of flashlights are sold.

FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, handles the company's $12 million budget, which Rayovac Vice Chairman Judy Pyle said will increase substantially in the fiscal year that starts in July.

The budget increase and the new interest in flashlights reflect marketers' commitment to higher ad spending in the $2.5 billion battery business.

During the holiday selling season, Duracell, Eastman Kodak Co., Eveready and Rayovac flooded the airwaves with TV spots. Even in the first half of 1988, traditionally the slowest period for battery sales, Duracell's overall spending rose 34.4% to $12.5 million compared with a year earlier, while Eveready's spending rose 40.8% to $10.1 million, according to Leading National Advertisers.

The new Rayovac products are designed for specific uses. Flashylights consists of midprice, all-purpose lights in combinations of six bright colors; the Roughneck offers a waterproof, brighter light for home and job uses; and the Tandem combines a floodlight and a spotlight for outdoor uses.

The flashlight market grew 16% to $415 million in 1987, according to Nielsen Marketing Research Group. Both Rayovac and Eveready believe it offers opportunities for segmented marketing and upscale products.

"There's a definite carryover factor, too," Ms. Pyle said. "We believe that this quality image set by our flashlights carries over onto our batteries, and the quality of our batteries carries over into a flashlight market that at this point is basically unbranded."

Mass-merchandise, drug and food stores account for about half of flashlight sales. In those outlets, Eveready's 25.9% share of lighting-product sales noses out Rayovac's 24.9%, according to Nielsen data from July/August 1988.

In the overall battery market, Nielsen and National Family Opinion data for July/August showed Eveready with a 40.5% share, Duracell at 30.9% and Rayovac at 16.1%. Kodak, a relative newcomer to the market, was in fourth place with a 4.9% share.

Eveready's six flashlight products are targeted more narrowly than Rayovac's. The Road Beam, for instance, is for car use, while Foreman lights are for workshops. Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif., handles.#

Billings from recent mergers weren't folded into billings of the 50 agencies, because most billings totals as they appeared were audited figures. New Whittle shocker

By PATRICK REILLY

Christopher Whittle, a pioneer in new forms of print media, will leap into the electronic realm this spring with an ad-supported TV program beamed daily into classrooms nationwide.

The satellite-delivered program, called "Channel One," will emanate from Los Angeles and resemble a network morning news program. It will feature 18-to-24-year-olds as news anchors.

Mr. Whittle, chairman of Whittle Communications, said the program will serve as a "teachers' tool that assists our education community."

"Channel One" will be the largest sponsor-supported program of its kind ever attempted in schools. The size of the teen-age audience could even exceed what the highest-rated network programs deliver.

"Channel One" will start in test form March 6 in five pilot schools in five cities, including Mumford High School in Detroit and Eisenhower Middle School in Kansas City, Kan.

The test will consist of 25 daily programs spread across five weeks that will reach 8,000 to 10,000 students.

Each program will be 12 minutes long, including 2 minutes of commercial time divided into four 30-second spots.

Sources indicate potential advertisers include Procter & Gamble Co., McDonald's Corp., Converse and the U.S. Army.

The program is a mix of news, features and educational matter and will be produced by Susan Winston, a former producer of ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," with help from William Rukeyser, Whittle editor in chief.

The test is expected to be followed by a national rollout in 1990 that Whittle executives project would put "Channel One" into 8,000 middle and high schools, reaching an audience of about 6.5 million students ages 12 to 17.

As part of the test and national rollout, Whittle will install in each school the equivalent of $50,000 in electronic hardware, including 30 to 40 monitors per school, videocassette recorders and satellite dishes. When not showing "Channel One" to students, schools will be free to use the Whittle closed-circuit TV system for other educational programs, Mr. Whittle said.

The test is expected to cost $5 million, while the national rollout will cost more than $100 million, he said. Mr. Whittle explained the company will be able to save substantially on electronic hardware costs by buying in bulk.

"Channel One" may raise as much controversy as Whittle's Special Reports magazine project begun last year. The publications were offered for waiting rooms of doctors who agreed to make only two other magazines available, a move that angered other publishers.

The protests this time may come from educators who object to advertiser-supported TV in schools.

Peggy Charren, president of Action For Children's Television, a watchdog group, said she thought "Channel One" was a "nifty idea" until she was told it would be ad supported.

"It's horrendous," she said. "It would be as if the school system were telling students what to go out and buy. Every school system in the country should fight this."

But Mr. Whittle said that every school administrator who has been shown "Channel One" has accepted it.

"We are excited about getting it," said David Lusk, superintendent of the Kansas City Public

Chiat, Mojo set stage for Euro growth

By GEOFFREY LEE MARTIN and CLEVELAND HORTON

Chiat/Day's bid to join the exclusive billionaire-billings club by acquiring Australia's Mojo MDA Group brings to mind Chiat/Day Chairman Jay Chiat's wisecrack: "I want to see how big the agency can get before it gets bad."

Should the $56.5 million deal go through, the $1 billion merged agency of Chiat/Day/Mojo will be in a strong position to continue his expansion philosophy. With the U.S. and now the Pacific Rim taken care of, the 20th-largest agency in the world plans to take on Europe.

Chiat/Day disclosed its two-phase bid for the Sydney-based Mojo last week (AA, Jan. 9). The deal was announced Down Under with a news release headlined: "Say G'Day to Chiat/Day."

The proposal, which still needs the approval of shareholders and the Australian government, effectively means that Mojo and Monohan Dayman Adams, which merged with Mojo in 1985, will go their separate ways. The pro-

Burger King adding Rosenfeld shop

MIAMI—Burger King tapped Rosenfeld, Sirowitz, Humphrey & Strauss, New York, for a regional ad program in the East, sources say. That puts the chain another step closer to implementing a layer of regional agencies and breaking up its centralized, $200 million account, now at N W Ayer, New York. Burger King denied that, saying any decision on adding a layer of regional agencies must be reached in concert with new owner Grand Metropolitan, and no such decision has been made. The introduction of new Pillsbury Chairman-CEO Ian A. Martin (see story on Page 44) to Burger King's marketing staff and national agency came last week at Ayer's Manhattan offices. Sources said the agency presented concepts for a successor campaign to "We do it like you do it." That campaign is expected to be completed in March. Insiders said Ayer's status on the account wasn't discussed.

CEO denies fraud charges

Agency group faces lawsuits

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—ABP Group International, built through mergers by Joseph F. Bartolone Sr. into a marketing conglomerate claiming billings of more than $100 million, has been accused of fraud by the principals of two companies it acquired over the past two years.

Also, principals at two other ABP-acquired companies have left the group. The principals of one said they've terminated their sales promotion shop's affiliation with ABP.

Three lawsuits filed against ABP and Mr. Bartolone, its chairman-ceo, allege that ABP wooed acquisitions by inflating group billings, lying about its financial condition and making false promises of new business.

ABP has denied the charges and is fighting the suits. Its motions to dismiss are pending.

Mr. Bartolone, reached by phone last week, said, "The allegations are totally untrue, and I will not weaken the condition of the agency by discussing them."

Ogilvy battles takeover talk

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—The future ownership of Ogilvy Group is in question again following a week of unexplained gyrations in the agency holding company's stock price.

Although no suitor has come forward, stock activity indicated the company may be "in play" for the second time in 17 months. There was an aborted takeover effort by former Ted Bates Worldwide executives Robert Jacoby and John Hoyne in August 1987.

To dissuade a bid, Ogilvy adopted a "poison-pill" shareholder rights plan at a hastily called board meeting Jan. 12. But financial experts cautioned that no company is takeover-proof and said the move might only boost Ogilvy's price if it's sold.

Last month, after months of complaints by Wall Street analysts about Ogilvy's "disappointing" and "laggard" earnings performance, Ogilvy directors discussed a dividend boost or share repurchase program at an unscheduled board meeting Dec. 20 (AA, Dec. 26).

At the Jan. 12 meeting, Ogilvy adopted the shareholder rights plan designed to "protect the interests of Ogilvy's shareholders in the event the company is confronted with coercive or unfair takeover tactics," Chairman-CEO Kenneth Roman said in a statement.

K. Roman

Mr. Roman was in London late last week and unavailable for further comment.

The plan offers holders of each share of common stock the right to buy $230 worth of stock for $115, if an offer is made or a shareholder acquires at least 20% of Ogilvy stock. It also would enable Ogilvy shareholders to buy stock in the acquiring company—if it's public—for half price.

An Ogilvy spokesman said late last week the agency holding company was unaware of any takeover threat, but he refused to say whether Ogilvy officials are discussing a possible leveraged buyout.

Analysts said any purchase of the company, from within or without, would cost $45 to $48 a share, or at least $600 million, a figure that could rise if speculative investors continue to boost the stock's price.

Possible suitors include WPP Group, London, which successfully mounted a $566 million hostile takeover of J. Walter Thompson Co. in June 1987, and Dentsu, the giant Japanese agency. However, Dentsu is viewed as less likely to seek an unfriendly acquisition.

WPP declined comment on Ogilvy; Minoru Kamata, Dentsu's senior managing director responsible for international operations, denied the speculation.

WPP Chief Executive Martin Sorrell has repeatedly praised Ogilvy's diverse mix of marketing services, calling the agency JWT's strongest competitor both strategically and creatively.

But debt from the JWT acquisition, coupled with WPP's comparatively lower stock price, would make financing an Ogilvy buyout difficult.

"It's a deal he'd [Mr. Sorrell] like, but it would be difficult," said analyst Emma Hill of Wertheim, Schroder & Co.

A flurry of rumors followed days of hectic over-the-counter trading in Ogilvy stock.

The share price jumped $3, to $30.50, on Jan. 9, after hovering in the mid $20s for at least several months. More than 286,000 shares were traded that day, and company officials said they were unaware of any reason for the stock activity. Ogilvy climbed another $2.50 to $33 on Jan. 10 on trading of 476,600 shares, more than 10 times the normal volume.

Still without any disclosures by would-be acquirers, the stock price dropped 50¢ on Jan. 11, to $32.50, on reduced volume of 189,000 shares. Following adoption of the poison-pill plan on Jan. 12, Ogilvy dropped $1.75; it rose 75¢ on Jan. 13, closing at $31.50.

"It doesn't appear from what the market is saying that any bidder is lining up for a hostile bid," said James Dougherty, analyst at County NatWest Securities USA.

Dentsu or any other Japanese agency is unlikely to try an unfriendly takeover; observers say it simply isn't the Japanese style of doing business.

Alan Gottesman, an analyst with PaineWebber, speculated that an equity swap may be in the works between Dentsu and Ogilvy that would help both agencies expand into each other's markets.

A stock swap similar to that planned by

Campbell eyes agency trims

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Campbell Soup Co. may consolidate its $20 million frozen-food account at a single agency, perhaps as soon as this spring.

The marketer's frozen-food business is currently split among three agencies: DDB Needham Worldwide, New York, for Mrs. Paul's frozen fish products; Ogilvy & Mather for Le Menu, Le Menu LightStyle and Great Starts frozen breakfasts; and Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, for Swanson frozen dinners and entrees.

Campbell executives declined comment.

Sources said Steven McNeil, 46, newly installed as president of the frozen-food group, is behind the proposed change.

Mr. McNeil, formerly VP and group general manager-convenience meals, added the title of Mrs. Paul's president last November. At that time, William Dowd, then president of Mrs. Paul's, resigned to join Kraft.

After Mr. Dowd left, Campbell combined Mrs. Paul's, convenience meals and all frozen foods into one unit.

One source close to the situation said Mr. McNeil "doesn't see the need for three separate agencies."

It couldn't be learned whether there would be a formal review for the combined account.

Campbell spent $5.2 million in measured media on Mrs. Paul's for the first nine months of 1988, according to Leading National Advertisers. Swanson was the second-largest spender, with $4 million in measured media for the nine months ended Sept. 30, with Great Starts

Two shops vie for Handycam

Sony looks global

By DAVID KILBURN and JULIE SKUR HILL

Sony Corp., in an unusual move, is talking to two agencies about consolidating one of its accounts on a worldwide basis.

The consumer electronics marketer is hearing presentations at its headquarters from McCann-Erickson Worldwide's McCann-Erickson Hakuhodo office and HDM Worldwide's Tokyo office for its 8mm Handycam video recorder, said Jeffrey Brooks, VP-advertising and promotion at Sony Corp. of America.

Sony executives in Tokyo weren't available for comment.

Worldwide coordination of advertising and marketing is uncommon for Japanese companies. Few Sony accounts have ever been handled on a global basis, sources said.

Some agency sources believe Handycam could become a test of global coordination.

In the U.S., McCann handles the Handycam account, with various other agencies assigned the business in other countries, Mr. Brooks said.

"I assume [more global alignment] is always a possibility for Sony, but that is not happening right now," he said.

A U.S. McCann source considers the pitch "an educational exercise" in global account management for Sony.

"In typically Japanese fashion, they are hearing how other companies do it, then they will decide if it is for them," the source said.

A decision on the Handycam account, believed to be small, is expected within 60 to 90 days.

The Handycam account may involve very little traditional advertising, possibly concentrating on direct-marketing and sales promotion efforts, sources said.

"It's possible that this [account] could just be coordination of strategic directions," Mr. Brooks said.

McCann handles Sony in seven countries, including the U.S. Dentsu, one of HDM's partners, handles Sony in Japan.

In 1986, Sony spent $188 million on worldwide advertising.#

Destination: U.S.

The more foreigners 'visit, the more they look for new places' and that's why Iowa and Maryland are among the surprises

By Len Strazewski

The U.S. is gaining strength from a weakened dollar as foreign tourists—with exchange rates in mind and pocketbooks in hand—march into this country in record numbers.

Trying to capitalize on double-digit increases in foreign tourists to the U.S. —from 1987 to 1988 overall tourism to the U.S. rose 16% to 29.7 million visitors—state tourism departments are focusing more of their ad budgets on overseas targets and teaming up with other states and travel industry co-op advertising partners.

The United States Travel & Tourism Administration, which provides co-op ad funding to encourage foreigners to visit the U.S., reports that foreign expenditures within the U.S. rose 21% from 1986 to almost $19.4 billion in 1987. The key international targets include France, Italy, Japan, Switzerland, the U.K. and West Germany, countries in which tourism grew 25% or more in 1988, according to the USTTA.

The USTTA coordinated about $13.8 million in 1988 international co-op advertising—up about 7% from 1987—involving destination states and travel industry companies, particularly international air carriers such as Trans World Airlines and Pan American World Airways. USTTA contributes and matches funds with the states, which contribute about 25% to 33% of the money. The rest of the funding comes from the airlines.

"Marketing overseas has been a priority of ours. We've been approaching international tourism from the regional perspective. The opportunity is there, and the foreign travelers like the idea of the regional approach . . . the states seem to realize the potential from it also," says Don Wynegar, director, Office of Research, USTTA.

Projections show the trend continuing, says George Kauss, USTTA assistant secretary for travel marketing. International tourism is expected to be up about 13% in 1988 to 33.5 million and expenditures topping $24 billion, he says.

"We're only projecting a 7% increase in 1989," Mr. Kauss says, "but we tend to be conservative early in the year."

The most popular destinations continue to be California, Florida, Hawaii, New York and New England, Mr. Kauss notes, and those states were the biggest participants in the co-op campaigns. However, he says that several inland states, including Minnesota and Wyoming are becoming more aggressive in their international marketing.

"First time tourists are still looking for fun and sun, so destinations like Florida remain hot, drawing tourists with beaches and Disney World," Mr. Kauss says. "But the more often people return to visit the U.S., the more they look for new places and some of the destinations are a surprise. Even Iowa has seen a dramatic increase in international tourism—about 180% over 1987.

Florida traditionally focuses on Spanish-speaking countries, says Tim Sweis, VP, McFarland & Drier, Miami, and ad director for the Florida Division of Tourism. The state spent about $870,000 of its total $4.8 million ad budget in international consumer advertising in fiscal year 1988 and will increase their international budget 26.4% to $1.1 million in fiscal 1989.

The spending paid off, according to Mr. Sweis, with a 32% increase in international tourism in 1988, the state's largest increase in years.

Among non-traditional destination states, Minnesota and Maryland are leading an increase in marketing efforts by teaming with other states in their area to create new tourism regions.

Although Minnesota spent only a about one-quarter of its $45,000 international tourism media budget, the cause is supported strongly by Northwest Airlines, which pitched in three dollars for every dollar the state contributed.

The state also is forming a partnership with other Great Lakes states to sponsor international tourism trade advertising, particularly in the U.K. and West Germany, he says.

Maryland also posted some gains last year, with international tourism up 15% to 20% in 1988, according to Peter Chambliss, chief of international tourism in the Maryland Office of Tourism Development.

Although the state has only about $20,000 in co-op programs to spend in its four international ad programs, it is participating in a $400,000 TWA co-op trade press campaign and working with several other nearby destinations to promote "George Washington Country" in the international trade press.

Wyoming, a state not traditionally known for its appeal to overseas visitors, is increasing its international marketing with some solid results. "Our international travel is up 117% over two years ago and seems to be steadily increasing," says Chuck Box, manager of travel development for the Wyoming Travel Commission.

"This kind of repackaging is exactly what many states need if they are going to compete with other worldwide locations," says Mr. Kauss. "Worldwide competition for tourism is so intense that if we don't have a product to sell, we'll miss out completely."

France develops case of revolutionary fervor

Peaceable mobs gathering, and U.S. invited

By Belinda Hulin-Salkin

On July 14, 1789, frenzied Parisians stormed the Bastille prison, effectively toppling the most famous monarchy in Europe and ushering in an era of popular sovereignty in France.

Now, 200 years later, the current French government is braced for a more peaceable mob scene on the Place de la Concorde as tourists from around the world are expected to join the French in celebrating the Bicentennial of the Revolution.

To ensure Americans will be well-represented in that throng, the French Government Tourist Office in New York will spend $4.5 million on advertising and promotion in the U.S. in 1989. "I expect the American public to be quite interested in this event," says Fred Rhines, president and ceo of Publicis, New York, the office's ad agency. "When you say 'revolution' and 'history' most Americans think of the U.S. After this year, we expect their second thought to be 'France.' "

According to European Travel Commission officials, the French Bicentennial festivities—launched in Paris on Jan. 1—probably will constitute the biggest attraction in Europe for 1989.

In the U.S., the Partners in Liberty Program—comprised of the French Government Tourist Office and American Committee on the French Revolution, Washington—will sponsor year-round festivals, exhibitions and cultural events in such cities as Albuquerque, N.M., Birmingham, Ala., Boston, Chicago, Durham, N.C., Galveston, Texas, Lafayette, La., Los Angeles, New York and San Diego.

From Jan. 27 to Feb. 7, Galveston will present "Mardi Gras! Galveston Proclaims Fete de France," and in late April, Lafayette, La., will host the "Festival of International de Louisiane."

"The French are certainly turning this into a broad-based celebration of their heritage . . . not just the 200th anniversary of cutting a king's head off," says Don Ford, chairman of the European Travel Commission, New York, and exec VP of the British Tourism Authority.

"It should attract a lot of people to Europe, and I expect the countries adjacent to France to benefit. In Britain, particularly, we expect to see some economic spin-off from the Bicentennial. Americans, especially first-time travelers to Europe, usually don't restrict their visit to one country."

About 2.5 million U.S. citizens are expected to visit France in 1989, an increase of 15% over 1988. And, 1988 saw an 18% increase over 1987, according to George Hern Jr., director of public relations for the French office, New York.

Conservative estimates place potential French revenues from those visitors at $2.5 billion. The increase in U.S.-French tourism has occurred despite a weak U.S. dollar and the French imposition two years ago of an entry visa requirement.

According to Mr. Hern, "We put on a hell of an advertising campaign last year, and we put together packages that guaranteed prices in U.S. dollars." He says that France's 1988 tourism ad budget topped $4 million.

The French agency plans no separate ad campaign for the Bicentennial affair, says Mr. Hern. Although the entire country will be promoted, the Bicentennial will form the core of 1989 U.S.-directed ad campaigns. Virtually every promotional piece for travel services and cultural attractions in France—from Hertz-Rent-A-Car and the National Railroads to museums and tour operators—mentions the anniversary.

"We'll be placing more emphasis on newspapers this year, because we want more ad support early in the year, and because all of our advertising is co-op," he says. "We'll be working with airlines, car rental agencies, hotels and tour operators."

Mr. Hern says 75% of the consumer ad budget is slated for a newspaper campaign and the remaining 25% for magazines. There will be no broadcast buys, he says. In addition, the French tourist agency has teamed up with French travel industry representatives to produce a 24-page free standing

Fighting for piece of Americana

'We're trying to prevent tourism from slowly dying' at Yellowstone

By Jill L. Sherer

"What do you do when your best client burns up?" asks Charles Lester, VP and co-owner of Sage Advertising, a Helena, Mont.-based agency for TW Recreational Services, Yellowstone National Park's main concessionaire.

To battle the consequences of fires that raged through the park from June to September, Conoco Inc., Idaho, Montana, Montana Power, Wyoming and Yellowstone's gateway towns joined TW in a joint promotion. Launched in November to win back the 377,382 tourists lost last season, the effort involved sending travel agents and journalists a videotape chronicling the fires and Yellowstone's rebirth; Wyoming and Montana also financed a brochure for the trade and media.

Rip Ripley, account manager at Wyoming's agency, Broyles Allebaugh & Davis, Englewood, Colo., says a crisis management approach or a trade-oriented public relations campaign were considered. He describes the first as a "knee jerk reaction to throw a lot of money into paid advertising," and the latter as "the most effective communication for the park and the whole state. We decided to run with an already developed campaign and add the PR element to tell the Yellowstone story."

According to Claudia Rowdabaugh, tourism director at the Cody Chamber of Commerce, the cooperative trade effort permits all the interested parties to work together under the same umbrella.

Mr. Ripley adds that Wyoming had neither the time nor the money to develop a new campaign to deal specifically with the fires. He says the main concern is not for next season. "Next year we expect to see curiosity travelers. We are worried that the fires will have an impact on tourism two to three years from now and that's what we're trying to guard against. We're trying to prevent tourism from slowly dying." A March 1990 campaign may include a TV spot addressing Yellowstone with the possible tagline, "If you like to see things grow, come to Yellowstone."

"It's true the fate of Wyoming tourism is on the line," Mr. Ripley says. The U.S. Travel Data Center estimates Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks generate about 88.2% of Wyoming's $850 million annual tourism revenue.

Wyoming did not increase its ad budget for the 1988-89 fiscal year ending June 30, 1988. Instead, it shifted ad dollars away from radio to concentrate on the trade promotions that addressed the fire.

Jill L. Sherer is a free-lance writer based in Chicago.

Tourism was down in November and early December by about 12% to 18% from the previous year, says Gene Bryan, director of the Wyoming Travel Commission. "It was off dramatically in August—approximately 50%—and up 40% in October from 1987."

"However, we have done enough [this year]," Mr. Ripley insists. "A lot has been done without us. You don't just get a 22-page spread in National Geographic or four or five segments over the course of a year on the Charles Kuralt show. No agency in the world can do that."

The Wyoming/Montana-financed four-page mailing, which dispensed information about affected areas, accommodations and statistics immediately after the fires, reported that Yellowstone's attractions were not adversely affected. According to Mr. Ripley, the media has reacted positively.

Scott Shane, editor of Travel-Holiday, says Yellowstone remains a big destination for inbound tourists, and that the area has heavily promoted the fact that the fires did not do damage. "I think most of what people want to see is still intact," he says, predicting no significant drop in 1989 tourism levels.

The Wyoming State Travel Commission is launching a new $1.4 million consumer ad campaign in March via BA&D. Carrying an umbrella theme, "Find yourself in Wyoming," the campaign includes about $1.1 million in regional TV, about $200,000 in national print, with the remainder directed to transit and outdoor. Ads features cartoon character Bullwinkle and is designed as a multi-year campaign.

Suzanne Young, executive director, Jackson Hole Chamber of Commerce, says the message of the advertising campaign is not being adjusted to address the fires "because public perception has not diminished but, in fact, has been heightened [by curiosity]."

"Public memory is short and always replaced by the next event. It's going to take a lot to remove the image of the fires blazing for 23 nights on network news, but I think there is interest in the 'after' story."

ST. LOUIS IS PLANE CRAZY.

Nearly 20 million people flew in and out of St. Louis' Lambert International Airport just last year. It's no wonder the Spirit of St. Louis was an airplane!

And it's no wonder that Lambert is the 6th busiest airport in the entire country.

Keeping up with these travelers isn't easy. But the best way to reach them is in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Your message in the Post's Sunday Travel section will take flight with 1,389,700 readers. 433,000 of these readers will pack up to fly to all parts of the U.S. in the next year alone. What's more, over half of all St. Louisans who jet off to foreign countries read the Sunday Post.

If you're trying to hit a moving target, call Gerry Anderson at 314-622-7454 and ask about the Post-Dispatch.

You'd be plane crazy not to.

Squabbling mires down centennial

By Kevin Gudridge

A well-intentioned Northwest Centennial celebration involving six states appears to be goin' south, victimized by disorganization and disagreement about the use of promotion funds.

The first time Idaho, Montana, North and South Dakota, Washington and Wyoming are banding together in a cooperative marketing program is likely to leave scars that may not heal for another 100 years.

The states hoped to use the centennial celebration to promote the entire region as a tourist hot spot. However, controversy arose between how to promote and fund the program. "I don't think you'll see the six states market together domestically again," says John Wilson, Travel Montana tourism director. "The region is just too broad to market in this country as one unit."

Kevin Gudridge is an Advertising Age correspondent based in Seattle.

The centennial-based co-op program "has been put together on sort of an a la carte basis as opportunities arose rather than as a coordinated campaign," says Carl Wilgus, administrator, Idaho Division of Travel Promotion. The arrangement illustrates some of the pitfalls in assembling a coalition of states that perceive themselves as having little in common and that come to the table with different marketing objectives and advertising budgets.

■ Intended to turn Northwest into tourism hot spot, celebration turns a bit unfriendly

"Part of the problem has been the coordination hassles involved with six travel divisions and six centennial commissions," says Elayne Wallis, press and PR officer for the Wyoming Travel Commission. "Several states are having problems in marketing their own centennials, and the co-op effort has just added to everyone's duties because no one really stepped out in front as a leader."

The co-op effort began to take shape in 1986 when state travel directors were invited to meet with centennial officials from the six states. "We were seen as out-of-state marketing arms that could position the centennial and the region uniquely in the travel market," says Mr. Wilson. "We realized there would be significant limitations on what we could do, but we agreed right away on the common logo and the events calendar."

The centennial commissions were set up separately from the state tourism divisions and without any direct government funding, except for Wyoming and Washington, which received $200,000 and $11 million, respectively, from their state legislatures. The centennial commissions, which have not given any money to the six-state co-op effort, expected individual state tourism divisions to fund the program. Individual state centennial commissions have been receiving a percentage of registration fees from the sale of centennial license plates and licensing their logo to manufacturers to fund their in-state promotions.

Problems have arisen from this arrangement. "You could say that some animosities have emerged on who pays for what," says Ms. Wallis.

For example, after Montana and the Dakotas balked at the expense of a 10-page February American Heritage insert, Idaho, Washington and Wyoming shouldered the $60,000 cost. Those states that did not contribute to the cost nonetheless will benefit from five pages of the insert that will cover the region's history and development and feature an events calendar.

The six states did agree on this common logo for the Northwest Centennial celebration.

According to Steve Shimek, publicity coordinator of Travel Montana, "Every time any of the other states get a request for travel information, we have the opportunity to use their money and come out a winner because information about Montana is going to be included in that fulfillment packet." Washington and Idaho will run spread ads and Wyoming a page ad; the cost of the project will be split proportionally among the three states.

Washington and Idaho contributed the most to the six-state project, spending approximately $42,300 each. Wyoming spent about $30,300, and Montana and North and South Dakota each contributed about $18,300.

"Money has a lot to do with everything that is or isn't being done," says Mr. Shimek. "In some states there's been a real question of who's going to come up with the money, the travel division or the centennial commission."

The states rejected the idea of seeking outside tie-ins. "It just wasn't worth the hassle," says Mr. Shimek. "Each state's centennial commission is going after that kind of money, and to go after a US West or an Exxon, you need a front person for fund-raising. Nobody wanted to add bureaucracy to this effort."

Other ideas—a $250,000 eight-page insert in USA Today, a six-state steam train excursion expected to cost several hundred thousand dollars, and a six-state treasure hunt to be backed by a national ad campaign—were rejected as being too expensive. "We just don't have the budget to make that kind of national splash," says Tracy Potter, publications

Six winners enjoy the ride in ad readership study

Starch INRA Hooper measures ad readership performance on three criteria: "Noted"—percentage of readers who remember having seen the ad in study issue; "Associated"—percentage of readers who saw or read something in the ad that would indicate the advertiser; "Read Most"—percentage of readers who read more than half of the ad copy.

Each year, Starch measures over 65,000 ads in 700 magazine issues. For this ADVERTISING AGE Special Report, Starch reviewed its 1988 data bank for the Travel category to identify those one-page, four-color ads that performed best in terms of reader "Noting." The six winners are British Airways, Embassy Suites Hotels, Lufthansa German Airlines, Princess Cruises, United Airlines and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

director of the North Dakota Tourism Promotion. "And I don't think we would have put up more money for the co-op effort. But some of the co-op deals were too good to turn down, even though we might have dragged our feet a little."

The states did agree on a common logo—"Celebrate the 1989-1990 Northwest Centennial," which will appear on an estimated 12 million government publications through 1990. They also spent $85,000 for 1 million copies of a four-color events calendar, available to the public in mid-December, $20,000 for a media kit and a newsletter to be sent to travel trade and $5,000 for a four-color brochure sent to tour operators.

According to Rick Ardinger, information specialist, Idaho Centennial Commission, "We see the opportunity to develop a national calling card by promoting Idaho with the other five states, while we get a two-year ride and the chance to learn from everybody else's mistakes."

Although the six-state arrangement is unlikely to be repeated, the individual states intend to maintain their co-op relationships with other states and pursue new ones. For example, Montana, Wyoming, the Dakotas and Nebraska work together on the 22-year-old Old West Trail Foundation, while Washington promotes the "New West Coast Playground" with Oregon and the "Two-Nation Vacation" with British Columbia.

"Any co-op effort has to be viewed two ways: Are you stronger in numbers than by yourself? And once you're involved, can you work it to your advantage?" asks Mr. Shimek.

"Each state clearly thought it has something to gain." Washington realized it would be a primary contributor, says Tom Stilz, travel media specialist, Washington Tourism Development Division. "But everyone benefits. I think the general attitude was that we'd be nuts if we didn't try to put something together."

insert scheduled to run in Chicago, Los Angeles and New York newspapers during February and March.

A 40-city series of travel seminars also is planned, and the agency is cooperating with an undisclosed department store on a fortnight promotion.

Mr. Ford credits the "guaranteed pricing" trend with allaying the fears of hesitant U.S. travelers. It "used to be Americans' primary concern about going to Europe was the cost of crossing the Atlantic," he says. "Now research shows that Americans are most concerned about inflation in Europe and the falling dollar.

"In response, a number of hotel groups and other organizations—led by the French—instituted a voucher system," Mr. Ford says. "Travelers pay for accommodations, meals, tickets in advance in American dollars [to guarantee their rate of exchange]."

Bruce Haxthausen, press relations manager for Air France's New York office, expects guaranteed pricing and value-oriented promotions to make up a strong segment of European travel this year. Air France, which controls an estimated 40% of the U.S.-to-France airline market, expects a "double-digit" boost in fares to Bicentennial France. He says the company won't offer any specific Bicentennial packages but may participate in packages from tour operators.

"The Bicentennial is a very diffused thing—it's happening all over the country," he says. "For many events, like Bastille Day in Paris, the hotels are showing strong sales, so building a package around that would be misleading."

Associate editor Anita Busch coordinated this report on Travel Marketing.

Skincare faces new products

By PAT SLOAN

Noxell Corp. and Cosmair will try to skin the competition in the $1.6 billion-plus facial skincare market with new lines under the Clarion and Plenitude brands.

The two lines will be priced competitively with Almay and other Revlon entries.

Noxell will introduce Clarion skincare in April. Cosmair will follow in September with Plenitude, the leading mass-market skincare line in France.

Advertising for Clarion's 13 skincare products will fit into the "Looking good and knowing it" theme first used on Clarion makeup last year (AA July 4). Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, handles Clarion.

Plenitude, a line of 12 products, will be marketed under the theme "Reduces signs of aging." Publicis, Paris, is handling.

Neither Noxell nor Cosmair would disclose ad spending for their introductions, but Cosmair executives said the Plenitude launch will represent its major mass-market effort for 1989.

The skincare introduction will help push Clarion's total ad spending up by more than 20%, said Steve Colnitis, marketing director for the brand. Last year, Noxell spent $20 million on Clar-

INTV scraps its plan for ad 'network'

By WAYNE WALLEY

The giant "unwired" sales network planned by the Association of Independent Television Stations has come unplugged.

Fox Television Stations and Tribune Broadcasting Co., two of the country's largest independent station groups, apparently killed the INTV plan to take on the Big 3 networks for upfront sales.

Sources said the Fox stations group balked because an independent co-op would compete with Fox Broadcasting Co. for ad dollars. Tribune Broadcasting is said to have nixed the idea because of its involvement in other unwired networks.

Neither Fox nor Tribune Broadcasting returned phone calls.

INTV President Preston Padden said the organization needed unanimous support to unite independent stations on a non-exclusive basis before launching the project.

"It seems some of the largest station groups thought it was such a good idea they wanted to do it themselves instead of through an INTV-sponsored network co-op," Mr. Padden said.

At least seven so-called unwired networks now exist, created by third parties that buy commercial time on independent TV stations nationwide and then resell the time to advertisers at a markup.

"The biggest problem for INTV would have been coordination."

How Reagan took America's pulse

'The Great Communicator' was a great listener of survey results

ADVERTISING AGE research columnist Jack J. Honomichl last summer was given an exclusive look at eight years of ex-President Ronald Reagan's research data, compiled by Richard B. Wirthlin, the president's pollster and confidant. Mr. Honomichl is the first "outsider" to gain access to this information, and the following is an edited excerpt from one chapter of his yet-unpublished book, "Measuring America." It is the first look at the Reagan administration's unprecedented use of public opinion polling as an adjunct to policy-making.

By JACK J. HONOMICHL

When the final appraisal of former President Ronald Reagan's leadership skills comes in, it may well conclude that one reason he was "The Great Communicator" was that he also was "The Great Listener."

The reason: a public opinion monitoring program of unprecedented scope that continuously fed Reagan and his advisers intimate knowledge of the American public's attitudes and opinions about world and national events during his eight years in office.

Through survey research—what the media refer to as "polling"—Reagan's White House listened to the "heartbeat" of more than 500,000 Americans in more than 500 surveys—a program unparalleled in scope or cost in presidential politics.

Conceived and managed by Richard B. Wirthlin, the former president's pollster and confidant, and funded by the Republican National Committee, these surveys probed just about every aspect of public affairs on a scale unmatched in U.S. history. What is even more important is that the surveys became an integral factor in President Reagan's decision-making.

For example, the surveys probed:

- The American public's knowledge of, and interest in, world events. Does the public really care, for instance, about what goes on in Israel? (About 19% of Americans didn't know about Israel, or not enough to have an opinion. Among those who did, Israel's popularity rating was 47 on a scale of 0 to 100, with 100 being "best possible" country. Canada's popularity rating, in contrast, was 72, which is extremely high, and Korea's was 42.)
- The awareness and popularity ratings of dozens of public personalities, ranging from Mikhail Gorbachev to Ted Kennedy, John Glenn, Dan Rather, Ted Koppel, the Rev. Jerry Falwell, Barbara Walters and First

Cheers for real winners of Super Bowl XXIII:

(Bud: ★ ★ ★ ½ Coke: ★ ★ ½)

Who won? Madison Avenue in a rout.

The advertising industry, if it can just this once muster some spontaneity, should spend the day doing the Ickey Shuffle. Sunday's TV spots scored at will. Apple Computer's "Lemmings" debacle can be forgotten at last. The Super Bowl TV Commercial Event, as the ultimate mass-marketing tool, is back.

I, for one, had feared that viewers had become resistant to the transparently manipulative techno-gimmick. But my fears were groundless. It is proved yet again that nobody ever went wrong overestimating the power of special effects on the American people.

Stunning commercials for Anheuser-Busch and Diet Coke unquestionably glued millions to their chairs. My suspicion is that viewing-audience pit stops were taken during championship play itself, either that or the game ball was the most gently treated bladder in America.

The Super Bowl TV Commercial Event is back, and two of the big winners were Anheuser-Busch's Bud Bowl I (l.) and Diet Coke's 3-D commercial, a TV first.

It was a day of advertising surprises but none so rewarding as the gridiron showdown between Budweiser and Bud Light. Everyone knew Bud Bowl I would be stupid, and it was. But you know what they say. . . . "On any given Sunday," and all that. This inaugural battle of the bottles was stupid and magnificent. Delightfully idiotic. Ridiculous and sublime.

The only way D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, St. Louis, could make this work was to faithfully reproduce the look of an NFL game in all its silly pageantry and misplaced seriousness. The agency succeeded to a fare-thee-well.

From the protective collars on the long-neck linemen to the Bear Bryant hat on the Bud Light coach to the earnest, overexcited

No. 2 retailer braces for tough fight in '90s

By PATRICIA STRNAD and JUDITH GRAHAM

From hypermarkets to a massive co-op marketing blitz with Family Circle magazine, K mart Corp. is developing new strategies to battle fast-growing Wal-Mart Stores and other retailers.

On Jan. 29, K Mart will unveil its first American Fare hypermarket, a joint venture with Bruno's, a leading Southeastern grocery chain.

The new store, a 244,000-square-foot facility in Atlanta, combines food and general merchandise, and will carry "everyday low prices" on all 45,000 items in the store. The typical 86,500-square-foot K mart carries everyday low pricing on about 3,000 of its items.

An image campaign using TV, radio and print breaks in that area today via DiIorio, Wergeles, New York, a subsidiary of K mart agency Ross Roy Group, Bloomfield Hills, Mich.

February marks the kickoff of K mart's new $20 million "At home with Martha Stewart" ad and promotional campaign, in partnership with Family Circle (AA, Jan. 16).

Chiat/Mojo deal in trouble?

Patterson has expressed interest in buying Mojo MDA's second agency, Mattingly Pty., now planned to be sold by Chiat/Day to a venture between HDM and Mojo MDA directors. Y&R's Stone & Adler seeks suitor

By ALISON FAHEY

Stone & Adler, the Chicago-based direct-response agency owned by Young & Rubicam, is on the auction block and HDM Worldwide has emerged as the most likely buyer.

Stone & Adler President Craig Thomas said the agency is negotiating with several suitors but would only confirm talks with HDM, the international agency network owned jointly by Y&R, Dentsu and Eurocom.

A decision on the agency's fate could be reached early this week, Mr. Thomas said.

John Rindlaub, Y&R's corporate relations director, also confirmed discussions between HDM and Y&R but said, "It's far from a done deal."

Sources said Stone & Adler has had perennial problems competing with Wunderman Worldwide, New York, the nation's largest direct-response shop, which is also owned by Y&R.

Nevertheless, the agency picked up more than $15 million in new business last year, including Navistar Transportation Corp., Alabama Space & Rocket Center and Allergan, said Stanton Lewin, VP-account supervisor.

Yearend 1988 figures weren't available.

"We had a great 1988," said Stone & Adler's Mr. Thomas. "We're a hot agency right now . . . agencies have been approaching us" about a sale.

That's a welcome change from 1987, when Stone & Adler reported $75 million in billings, down almost 23% from 1986. That figure represented the combined billings of the Chicago office and Chapman Stone & Adler, the New York operation.

HDM is in the process of forming HDM Worldwide Direct Marketing Group, which will be the umbrella company for all its current HDM direct-response shops in Los Angeles,

Philips moves to cut agency cancel period

By GARY LEVIN

Dutch-owned NV Philips, an Ogilvy & Mather client, is moving to significantly reduce the time frame of cancellation clauses in contracts with its ad agencies.

The move isn't tied to concerns that Ogilvy Group's stock may be "in play," but that may have helped trigger the Philips action.

"We want a clause in our contracts that allows us to sever the contract if the financial ownership or management of the agency changes quickly," said Rob Riphagen, director of corporate and consumer electronics marketing communications at the company's headquarters in Eindhoven, Netherlands.

Other agencies on the Philips roster are Publicis, Paris; and BBDO Worldwide; D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles; Lintas:Worldwide; and WPP Group's J. Walter Thompson Co., all New York.

O&M handles Philips' consumer electronic brands in 28 countries.

"We are discussing [shortening the cancellation time] with publicly owned and non-public advertising agencies," Mr. Riphagen said of the clauses, which typically are longer than the 90-day terms common among U.S. advertisers.

He didn't indicate what new time frame he's considering.

Ogilvy Group stock continued to trade at a furious pace last week as the names of a few potential bidders surfaced to help explain a persistent run-up in its price (see related story, Page 54).

With nearly 700,000 shares traded during the week ended Jan. 20, Ogilvy stock reached $32, more than $5 above its price when trading first zoomed Jan. 9.

Other big O&M clients—such as American Express Co., Ford Motor Co. and Mattel—haven't indicated any concern about their cancellation clauses with the shop. An executive of one O&M client said any cancellation clause of less than 60 days would cause problems because it would take that long to close out media placements.

A spokesman for American Express, O&M's biggest worldwide client, said the company isn't troubled by a takeover threat.

"We're not concerned about the possibility because we haven't seen

Bricklin plans car retail setup

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Entrepreneur Malcolm Bricklin, fresh from bailing out of Global Motors' Yugo problems, is trying to establish the auto industry's first national retailing organization.

If successful, Bricklin Motors could control as many as 1,000 dealership points nationwide and ad budgets estimated at $20 million to $22 million in its first year and $80 million to $100 million in its second year, said Paul Lambert, a member of the company's "corporate roundtable" in charge of marketing.

The organization would operate like a Century 21-type real estate franchise, with national advertising stressing extra benefits to consumers—such as a wider range of brands, 24-hour service and entertainment-oriented sales techniques.

Bricklin Motors hasn't decided how to assign its advertising, though one possibility is to acquire regional agencies. A portion of each dealer's ad budget would go into a fund to create an overall image for the Bricklin Motors name.

Financial backing for the venture is being arranged by investment banker L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg Towbin, with Printon Kane Capital Corp. serving as financial adviser on the estimated $2 billion undertaking, according to Automotive News.

Mr. Lambert said Bricklin Motors intends to implement innovative techniques in its dealerships, including the use of a special-effects-filled show developed by Technifex Inc. The computerized sales pitch, available to each salesman in his "closing booth," features 3-D representations of characters, including celebrities, addressing prospective car buyers on relevant subjects.

Bricklin Motors also plans a compensation system for salesmen, service department workers and others based on customer satisfaction goals.

The operation intends to start by buying controlling interest in 10 megadealers in different regions of the country within six months. An announcement of the first purchase could come before the end of this month.

Using those as a base, the plan is to expand to 100 to 200 dealer points by the second year and 1,000 dealer points by the third year.

Mr. Bricklin has been involved in several automotive ventures, dating back to his founding of Subaru of America in 1968. He founded Global, parent company of Yugo America, but sold his interest to a private investment group last April.

Mr. Lambert is president of Lambert/Dale, New York, which is still agency of record for Yugo America.

Earlier, Mr. Lambert said that Yugo is "millions of dollars" in debt to media and vendors (AA, Jan. 2). He declined to comment on prospects for a split with Yugo America, importer and distributor of the Yugoslavian-built line.

Financially strapped Global Motors has been openly searching for new investment backing.#

V-8 power boosts veggie juices

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Vegetable juices, languishing on supermarket shelves just three years ago, are showing some renewed health.

Although still a comparatively small segment of the overall juice category, blended vegetable juices experienced a hearty 26.4% jump in sales last year to $237.8 million, according to SAMI/Burke.

Marketers in the past have left the field to Campbell Soup Co.'s V-8, but now they're starting to take notice. J.M. Smucker Co. is testing Hearty Vegetable Juice, a 100% juice blend, in Denver.

Smucker in 1984 acquired R.W. Knudsen & Sons, a California marketer of health juices. Three years later it decided to test the market potential for vegetable juice.

"We came to want to take a harder look at how the market developed," said a source at Smucker. "And we concluded it was a growth segment, dominated by V-8."

Smucker isn't actively advertising Hearty Vegetable Juice in Denver. Wyse Advertising, New York, is the company's agency. Smucker markets its other juices primarily in West Coast markets.

The segment is benefiting from consumer interest in nutritious foods and a successful new ad campaign from Campbell.

V-8 "was in the doldrums" as recently as 1985, said David Hackney, Campbell manager of public relations.

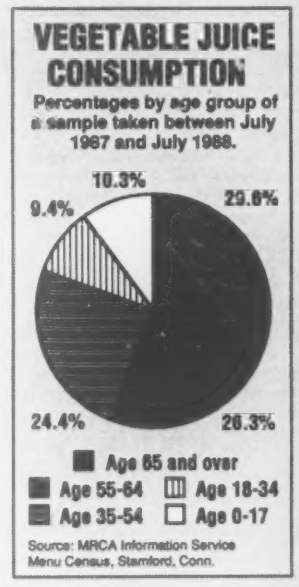
In summer 1986, the company switched the V-8 account to Saatchi & Saatchi, London, parent of then-current shop Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York. "We couldn't find acceptable creative in the U.S.," Campbell USA President Herb Baum said at the time.

Saatchi's first campaign, themed "Things don't have to be hard on you to be good for you," was aimed at health and exercise enthusiasts and didn't have a broad appeal.

But in 1987, the agency came up with a new theme, "Drink V-8, keep your diet straight," and an amusing campaign that showed people walking on a slant until they had a V-8.

The network campaign has been a rousing success, said Campbell, whose share of the $340 million red-juice market jumped to 54% in 1988 from 48% a year earlier. Campbell doesn't measure V-8 within SAMI/-Burke's blended vegetable juice segment but within the red—or tomato—juice segment.

Mr. Hackney said targeting a more general audience contributed to the brand's growth, as well as the introduction of new packaging sizes.



JOHN HALL

A hefty increase in V-8's ad budget, from $4.6 million in 1985 to an estimated $7 million in 1988, also helped boost sales, making Campbell by far the segment's biggest spender.

Cadbury-Mott's Clamato has gotten much less ad support, only $301,000 in measured media in 1987, according to Leading National Advertisers. That year, Smucker spent $182,500 on its other juices.

Still, the vegetable juice segment may need something else—possibly another strong national player—to maintain momentum and increase consumption among young adults.

A study by MRCA Information Services Menu Census found that most vegetable juice is consumed by people over age 35; people over 65 consume the largest percentage of vegetable juice—29.6% (see chart).

The older age skew could be a boon, however. Baby-boomers are aging, and marketers are paying more attention to older consumers.

Vegetable juice has made gains in Canada, too. Early last year, H.J. Heinz Co. rolled national in Canada with Heinz Vegetable Cocktail.

The brand was first introduced in Ontario and Quebec in mid-1987, with rollout plans scheduled for May 1988. But by January 1988, the entry had achieved an 11.5% market share, prompting an early move national, a Heinz spokesman said.

Heinz said it has no plans yet to move Vegetable Cocktail into the U.S.

Not every marketer is optimistic about vegetable juice.

Tri-Valley Growers, a California co-op, markets Sacramento Tomato Plus Vegetable Cocktail, but a spokeswoman said the group believes the segment isn't going anywhere.

The co-op doesn't plan to support the Sacramento brand product, which at one time was marketed by Borden and has been on the market for about 20 years.#

Stakes rise as market matures

Cautious stations, solid lineup of hits make it harder for syndicators to sell new product

By Wayne Walley

When Robin Leach first started cataloging the lifestyles of the rich and famous in 1984, TV syndicators didn't realized that someday, they could end up as subjects of the show.

Once in the business of TV reruns, syndicators today have entered an era of big bucks and broken hearts, where the rich get richer and everbody else gets squeezed out—unless they find a hit.

Ritch Colbert, former president of near-defunct Access Syndication and VP-director of programming for Television Program Enterprises, sums up the market this way: "If you are not studio-based, well capitalized and/or associated with a broadcast group, then the odds are stacked against you."

"A few years ago, business was a lot better," says Michael Eigner, VP-station manager, KTLA-TV, Los Angeles. "Stations had the flexibility to buy more programming than they might need. But stations now have a lower profit margin and people are being cautious."

The problem for syndicators today is not the failure of syndicated shows, but the spate of successes. "Wheel of Fortune," "Jeopardy" and "The Oprah Winfrey Show" already have been renewed by stations into 1992 and beyond.

"Star Trek: The Next Generation," "War of the Worlds," "Donahue," "Geraldo," "The People's Court" and "Love Connection" all perform well enough to fill a majority of available time slots on station schedules.

Top off-network series such as "The Cosby Show" and "Who's the Boss?" command record prices in syndication, selling for $4.8 million and $2.5 million per episode, respectively. These high prices force stations to schedule the shows in the most lucrative time periods to recoup costs, leaving a new show or modest off-network success in a slot with fewer viewers available.

Other forces are also at work. Fox Broadcasting Co.'s entry as a weekend programming service for independent stations removed a number of hours from the syndication marketplace.

The Home Shopping Network purchased a number of independent TV stations and switched to home shopping. And some stations, squeezed by high programming costs and a soft advertising market, have been forced into bankruptcy.

All this means fewer opportunities for newcomers. Some observers believe if two other first-run shows had lived up to expectations last fall—"USA Today On TV" and "Family Feud"—chances are some stations would not be in the market to buy any new syndicated programming this year.

"The syndication marketplace feels as if it is mature," says Mort Marcus, exec VP of Qintex Entertainment. "Business is bad because some stations have high debt, and there is a soft national advertising market. The stations cannot afford the cash outlay for programming.

"But the fact is that first-run syndication is a major growth area. There's more product today and more first-run shows among the top 30 shows in syndication than ever before," he adds.

While many agree the syndication business is maturing, making it tougher for the smaller outfits to succeed, most say there's room for expansive bottom-line growth and the possibility that an outsider can still come in with a hit.

One winning show can make all the difference for a distribution company. With "RollerGames" in its fold, many more doors are opening for the Qintex sales staff. (See story on Page S-2)

Chuck Larsen, president-domestic TV distribution, Republic Pictures Corp., says the fact that some shows are being renewed for up to five years in advance is merely a phase, and that the industry is far from mature.

"There has been a shake-out at the station level and it will go through more settling, but as long as the home run and megabucks are possible, more people will want to play," he says.

Most industry experts agree that no matter how tight the schedules are, one hot property can command record prices and help the industry grow financially.

Phil Corvo, president of the National Association of Television Program Executives International, says the syndication market will earn an aggregate $3 billion during the 1988-89 season from program sales and barter advertising.

The Advertiser Syndicated Television Association expects barter revenues alone to top $1 billion this year, about 10% higher than last year.

"On a revenue basis, syndication is not mature," says Derk Zimmerman, president, Group W Productions. "Studies indicate barter syndication could be a $3 billion business by the mid 1990s, topping national cable ad sales. Program syndication will also get up to the $3 billion level."

But Mr. Zimmerman says that, at the same time, it has become more difficult to break into the market.

"Last year not one breakthrough hit emerged," he says. "Part of the problem is station programmers have higher than appropriate expectations and are less willing to give the time and attention to develop and nurture a program."

While media buyers say network TV, even with smaller audiences, will continue to be the vehicle of choice for advertisers that need to reach a mass audience on a timely basis, syndication is fast becoming a part of the mix. When the syndication market does reach total maturity, it is likely there will always be room for an outsider to make it big with a single hit. And chances are, plenty will keep trying.

"You can cite the odds of winning a jackpot to slot machine players in Las Vegas, but they will still put the quarter in," Mr. Larsen says.

Hispanic TV leader sets print revolution

By ED FITCH

Univision Holdings, owner of the largest U.S. Spanish-language TV network, is moving to revolutionize Spanish-language magazines.

Univision's ambitious plans could bring an infusion of ad dollars to what's been a minor factor in Hispanic media.

In August, the company's new publications division will launch Ahora, described as a general-interest, service-oriented Spanish-language magazine that combines elements of People, Time and New York.

The quarterly publication will carry a Business Publications Audit of Circulation-audited controlled circulation of 500,000, delivering 370,000 more readers per issue than any other Spanish-language magazine.

"The available national print media's circulation is about one-third of what Ahora will achieve in its first release," said Meg Bernot, media director of Publicidad Siboney, New York. The agency is evaluating Ahora for clients Colgate-Palmolive Co. and Pepsi-Cola USA. No advertisers have been signed yet.

Hispanic agency media buyers say Ahora will drastically alter the field of Spanish-language magazines. Of the $550 million spent in Hispanic media annually, print garners only an estimated 9%, most of it directed at newspapers.

Also, most recent successful launches of Hispanic-oriented national print media have been in English. For example, English-language newspaper insert Vista recently hit 1.4 million circulation (AA, Sept. 28).

If Ahora meets its ad objectives, it will boost print spending single-handedly.

"We blow existing print budgets out of the water," said Javier Saralegui, sales manager. "But when one page in Sports Illustrated costs $80,000, to hit a whole community with one book at the price we're asking is not out of line."

A color page in Ahora will cost $15,000 and Pepsi calls Coke ads misleading

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Pepsi-Cola Co. last Friday accused rival Coca-Cola USA of misleading consumers with its ad campaign that claims Pepsi drinkers are switching to Diet Coke.

Pepsi said it's asking the Big 3 TV networks to pull the new campaign, which claims "the move is on" to Diet Coke.

Coca-Cola said it can substantiate its claims. The commercials were created by McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York, and Lintas:New York.

Pepsi challenges are now part of marketing folklore: It has challenged ads in the past with little or no result because competing research is difficult to disprove. But this attack is different, said Michael Lorelli, Pepsi exec VP-marketing and national sales.

"The cola wars have always been fun, and it's been good for business," he said. "But this is one of the rare times that they [Coca-Cola] have gone under the table. . . . The claim is wrong. . . . We have to take it seriously."

Pepsi is charging that Coca-Cola is telling "only half the story" in its new campaign that

Papers wary of Sears plan

By PATRICK REILLY

San Francisco—Sears, Roebuck & Co. last week unveiled a tradition-breaking media plan for 1989 and beyond that's already provoking some newspaper opposition.

The plan, presented to the International Newspaper Advertising & Marketing Executives convention here, calls for corporate contracts from major newspaper chains and a single negotiated rate that covers all Sears companies.

"This is a major change, and we know it," said S. Scott Harding, Sears' national retail ad manager. "But we must change to succeed now and in the '90s. I think it is clear the newspaper industry must change, too."

The good news for the industry in Sears' plan is that the giant retailer will support the anticipated spring switch to "everyday low prices" by an increase in total newspaper run-of-press ad linage and a decrease in preprinted insert sections in many markets.

Newspapers generally charge advertisers in preprinted circulars

Airlines' suit fights state ad guidelines

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

WACO, TEXAS—Three airlines have filed suit against Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox in the first legal challenge of the states' national guidelines on air-fare advertising.

The suit, filed Jan. 23 by British Airways, Continental Airlines and Trans World Airlines, alleges Mr. Mattox illegally tried to regulate airline price advertising by enforcing guidelines drawn up by the National Association of Attorneys General.

The suit could eventually determine the states' authority to regulate national advertising.

In a hearing in U.S. District Court here Jan. 27, Judge Walter S. Smith Jr. said he would issue a decision this morning on the airlines' request for a temporary injunction.

If granted, the order would prevent Mr. Mattox from suing the airlines for not complying with NAAG's air-fare ad guidelines until a decision is reached. Judge Smith also said he'd consider Mr. Mattox's motion to dismiss the case as well as a motion to delay the case.

The airlines' suit was prompted by a Nov. 14 letter from Texas Assistant Attorney General Stephen Gardner to five carriers (AA, Nov. 21). The letter, also on behalf of four other states, said the carriers must include all footnoted surcharges in the advertised fare.

The states told the carriers that if they failed to include international surcharges (usually $23) in the advertised fare, they would be sued.

Specific U.S. Department of Transportation orders allow certain surcharges to be footnoted, pitting federal authority against the states.

After receiving the letter, many airlines, including British Airways, decided to comply with the states; others temporarily stopped adver-

Campbell ran afoul of the Federal Trade Commission with this ad from Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York.

FTC attacks Campbell ad health claim

By STEVEN W. COLFORD and JUDANN DAGNOLI

Food marketers using health claims in advertising had better be prepared to disclose any ingredient that dilutes those claims, the Federal Trade Commission said in a complaint issued last week against Campbell Soup Co.

The complaint stems from a Campbell print ad that claimed its soups are low in fat and cholesterol and help reduce the risk of heart disease.

The FTC's complaint said the ad was misleading because it failed to disclose the soups are high in sodium and that might increase the risk of heart disease.

Campbell denied the FTC's charges, saying it will contest the case before an agency administrative law judge.

"We don't believe the ad is misleading," said David Hackney, manager of public relations.

The ad, part of Campbell's "Soup is good food" campaign, appeared mostly in women's service magazines during 1988 and is no longer running. It was created by Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York. The "Soup is good food" campaign was replaced last September with a return to Campbell's old "M'm m'm Good" theme.

The disputed ad said "a diet low in fat and cholesterol may reduce the risk of some forms of heart disease" but made no reference to the Shearson likely to ax McCann?

By JUDITH GRAHAM

NEW YORK—Shearson Lehman Hutton already is talking to Hal Riney & Partners as the brokerage compiles a list of agencies for a review of its $15 million account, now at McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

McCann, which recently hired new staff for the account, was "surprised and disappointed" by the move, said John J. Dooner Jr., president of McCann North America. He said the agency will try to keep the business.

But Cathleen Stewart, exec VP-marketing at the nation's second-largest brokerage company, was sounding last week as if a divorce was already final.

"It's like a marriage where everyone tries hard and in the end it just doesn't work," she said.

Ms. Stewart said Shearson was pleased with McCann's creative work but dissatisfied with the level of support from top executives and the quality of account services.

"The agency was not geared up for our kinds of demands," she said, adding that Shearson had expected more involvement from top agency executives.

Ms. Stewart said she didn't have a list of agency candidates but acknowledged that Shearson has started talking to Riney and other, undisclosed agencies.

Riney began working with E.F. Hutton & Co. just before it was bought by Shearson at the end of 1987; until the two brokers combined, Riney was expected to become agency of record on Hutton, which had handled advertising in-house.

Shearson is looking for a small to midsize agency with "extremely good creative and a very strong account management team" to handle the creative and production portions of its account, Ms. Stewart said.

Media buying will remain with Media Placement Services.

The review signals a re-evaluation of Shearson's advertising and almost certainly sounds the death knell for its recent corporate campaign featuring national figures,

Pepsi rises to top ad-recall spot

By SCOTT HUME

After billions of dollars and millions of hours were spent pondering how to allocate advertising dollars, the list of 1988's 10 best-recalled advertisers is little different from the 1987 list.

The final 1988 tally of ADVERTISING AGE's monthly adWatch survey showed Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola/-Coca-Cola Classic once again were the two best-recalled advertisers. But in 1988, they reversed positions, with Pepsi claiming the No. 1 spot.

Five advertisers—McDonald's Corp., California Raisin Advisory Board, Anheuser-Busch, Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet division—even kept the same top 10 rankings as in 1987.

Miller Brewing Co. stayed in the top 10 but dropped to No. 9 in 1988 from No. 6 the year before.

That left room only for two new top 10 advertisers—politicians and Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide laundry detergent.

The two advertisers that fell from the top 10 top-of-mind recall list were Chrysler Corp. and E&J Gallo Winery's Bartles & Jaymes coolers. Chrysler, No. 9 in 1987, finished 13th in 1988 (behind want ads in 11th and Toyota Motor Sales USA in 12th). Bartles & Jaymes, No. 10 in 1987, was somewhere back in the pack.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and the Gallup Organization. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that first comes to mind from all seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days. Each month, 1,000 respondents, interviewed by phone, are first asked for their overall first response and then the advertising they recall in a variety of categories.

For December, McDonald's advertising was tops in recall. Other advertisers in the month's top 10 were, in descending order, Ford, Chevrolet, Miller, Pepsi, California raisins, A-B's Budweiser/Bud Light, General Motors, K mart Corp. and Coca-Cola.

Final 1988 standings were reached by calculating average monthly responses.

In the individual categories for 1988:

- Ford easily outran the competition in the cars and trucks category, averaging a 22.8% share of first mentions. Chevrolet was second with an 18.6% share and Toyota third with 6.6%.
- Apple Computer was the year's winner in the computer category with an average monthly share of 31.2% of first mentions, vs. IBM Corp.'s 21.9% and Radio Shack's 2.5%.
- Nobody can do it like McDonald's can, as the chain's advertising once proclaimed. Big Mac continued to dominate its category as no other advertiser does. In 1988, it averaged 46.2% of first mentions in the fast-food category, while Burger King Corp. settled for 13.2% and Wendy's International averaged a 7.6% share.
- The story in the soft-drink category was the same as it was in the overall top 10 list: It was Pepsi-Cola Co.'s year on top. No. 2-selling Pepsi was the best-recalled advertiser in the category with an average 37.4% share of first mentions. Coca-Cola Co.'s Coca-Cola/Coca-Cola Classic was second with 29.9%.

The battle for third place was very tight, but Diet Coke won with a 3.38% average share, followed by Diet Pepsi's 3.35% and 3.3% for 7UP, marketed by Dr Pepper/-Seven-Up Cos.

- One of the year's most interesting developments came in the tire category. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and Michelin Tire Corp. began the year with nearly equal shares (18% and 16.9%, respectively). But a pair of new campaigns for its tires and its Certified Auto Services outlets—from Young & Rubicam, Detroit—put Goodyear out in front to stay. The final averages: Goodyear 23.3%, Michelin 18.6% and Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. 6.6%.
- Hal Riney may be gone, but Messrs. Bartles and Jaymes remain memorable characters. B&J parent Gallo was the winner in the wine category with an average 12.3% share of first mentions, followed by the cooler at 10.3% and 7.8% for Banfi Vinters' Riunite.#

Dealer ad groups flash their muscle

Fastest growing area of auto advertising wins respect, enthusiastic agencies

By Raymond Serafin

Hugh Trenkamp remembers when "a lot of people would say they didn't want to work on that 'dealer crap.' "

The senior VP-management director of the regional advertising group for J. Walter Thompson USA, Detroit, has seen those attitudes change dramatically in the 16 years he's been involved with dealer co-op ad groups.

Dealer ad groups make up the fastest growing tier of automotive advertising, with manufacturers and individual dealers on the other tiers. Between advertising their own stores and contributing to regional groups, new car and truck dealers are pouring money into advertising at a rate approaching $4 billion a year, according to the National Automobile Dealers Association.

That kind of money has reshaped a lot of thinking about dealer advertising. In the last few years, the entire category has grown fast: The billings, the importance to brand building, agency competition for accounts, marketing sophistication, and inevitably, the arguments between manufacturers and dealers over funding and control.

New car and truck dealerships spent $3.5 billion on advertising in 1987, a 9.4% increase from 1986, according to NADA. Tom Webb, senior economist for NADA, says preliminary data indicates that advertising as a percentage of total sales remained steady at 1.3% in 1988. With sales up an estimated 11% in 1988, dealer spending on advertising is about $3.9 billion.

"Dealers are, on the average, spending more than $300 per new car retail, which is an astonishing figure," says John Ferron, partner at J.D. Power & Associates, an automotive market-research specialist.

Texas region Ford dealers are foresaking more typical hard-sell for lifestyle vignettes in TV spots in the state.

The growth in the number of mega-dealers is helping drive up ad spending figures. A decade ago, less than 15% of dealerships were part of a "chain"—two or more dealerships owned by the same principals; the figure now is closer to 50%.

Mega-dealers generally are located in competitive metro markets and are big users of TV. Local dealers invested $371.4 million in TV in the top 75 markets monitored by Broadcast Advertisers Reports, a 9.6% increase from 1986, according to an analysis by Television Bureau of Advertising.

Another factor is the bigger role of dealer ad groups. Dealer co-op programs accounted for an estimated $1.1 billion in dealer spending in 1987 and are continuing to grow fast, says Mr. Webb. Factories provided an estimated $300 million in matching funds in 1987.

The growth in dealer group advertising is showing up in spot TV trends. Although spot figures include regional programs funded by manufacturers, the bulk of the spending comes from dealer ad associations, says Dick O'Donnell, VP-automotive for TvB.

In 1987, automotive spot TV spending hit $1.143 billion, up 24.8% from 1986, and surpassed network TV automotive spending by $228 million. For the first six months of 1988, automotive spot TV spending of $585.5 million was up 9.9% compared with the same period in 1987, according to TvB.

"The big growth has been in the last three to four years, as the manufacturers realized they don't sell the same models of cars and trucks in different regions," says Mr. O'Donnell. "Station wagons don't sell in Dallas, but they do in Boston."

Ford has been involved in co-op ad programs with dealers since 1936, but Mr. Trenkamp says that until recent years, it was a "hit and miss" proposition. Now, he says, dealer group advertising is more prominent than factory efforts in fiercely competitive markets such as Chicago.

"Dealers are buying upfront as if they were a division," says George Beech, exec VP-general manager, Birmingham, Mich.-based Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, which handles 49 of the 52 Chrysler Motors' Chrysler-Plymouth dealer ad groups. "They demand a choice of quality creative, and they want you to spend their money intelligently."

Dealer groups are putting less emphasis on clearance sales in favor of "long-term marketing strategy," Mr. Trenkamp says. For example, JWT's work for a Texas dealer group features brand-building lifestyle vignettes, which are more common in national advertising.

Mr. Ferron says manufacturer incentives' advertising is blurring the distinctions between the three tiers of auto advertising.

"Co-op is doing much more product advertising to augment the shout of the manufacturer, and dealers are spending a higher percentage of their advertising dollars on product-related issues and less on creating dealership image," he says.

Some automakers, such as Chrysler Corp., Volkswagen of America, Mercedes-Benz and Ford's Lincoln-Mercury division steer their ad associations toward using the factory agency, contending it helps to convey a unified message

Power consolidates at mega-dealers

But the foothold for lesser brands can mean quick hook in tough times

By Patricia Strnad

Charles Darwin's theory of evolution may well fit the auto industry in a marketplace that is fostering the growth of mega-dealerships.

Mega-dealers—high-volume dealers usually owning multiple franchises—have become more commonplace as dealers diversify and reduce their reliance on a single brand.

The National Automobile Dealers Association estimates the 25,000 dealerships in the U.S. are owned by 17,000 dealer principals, as opposed to 28,850 dealerships owned by 25,100 dealers in 1979.

J. David Power III, president of J.D. Power & Associates, an automotive marketing information company, says the top 800 principals control 30% of the business. In the crowded U.S. vehicle market, mega-dealerships may pose serious problems for manufacturers of struggling brands such as Yugo and relatively new and unproven nameplates, says John Ferron, a partner at J.D. Power.

A dealer attitude survey conducted by J.D. Power in late 1987 showed that 30% of the mega-dealers indicated they might drop a brand within the next 12 months. In fact, 35% of Alfa Romeo dealers said they were considering dropping the brand. The same is true for 20% of Yugo dealers; 17% for Subaru; 15% for Peugeot; 13% for Volkswagen and 11% for Audi.

A soon-to-be-released survey indicates that newer franchises are having a tough time being considered a permanent part of any dealership portfolio, says Mr. Ferron. It indicates that the burden is on the manufacturer to prove its case, creating tension between dealers and manufacturers.

"I think it's harder for manufacturers if mega-dealers don't want them," says J. Rick Hendrick III, owner of Hendrick Management Corp., a dealership holding company. "If a franchise comes in the market and it just doesn't make sense and the manufacturer is asking for too much, they're going to have a hard time selling their program."

Manufacturers, recognizing the market is changing, are coming up with special dealer support programs that they feel will help encourage dealers to build the facilities they request. In fact, some manufacturers—especially those of lower-volume makes—are becoming more realistic in their negotiations with dealers about the size of facilities, whether they are exclusive, where they should be located and special financing, Mr. Ferron says.

"Dealers have more clout today," says Bob Henderson, general director of dealer operations for General Motors Corp.'s Buick division.

It's becoming "increasingly difficult for the divisions to deal with multiple dealer operators on a local level," he says. There is more of a tendency to deal on a regional basis because generally their operations encompass more than one geographic area.

Ford prefers to sign on the dealer who is "active in his community and who's going to be personally involved in operating that dealership on a day-to-day basis," says Al Kleinke, market representation manager for Ford Motor Co.'s Ford division. The manufacturers have abetted the mega-dealer trend by seeking successful dealers of other lines to carry their brands.

"Manufacturers want dealers with proven track records," says Mr. Hendrick. "The two things they look at when approving you is your market penetration and your CSI [customer satisfaction index]."

About four years ago General Motors Corp. relaxed its multiple-dealer investor policies, which restricted the number of dealerships a GM dealer could own and prohibited them from carrying imports.

"It becomes more difficult for the manufacturer as dealers become more different [from one another]. There are these large, high-volume operators trying to be creative in major impact markets that the manufacturer has to satisfy. But that dealer isn't anything like the [rural] Ford dealer who is dependent solely on Ford," Mr. Ferron says.

ON THE AIR

The big gets bigger. "Sabado Gigante," Univision Network's game/variety show, increased its domination of Spanish-language TV. According to just-released Strategy Research Corp. fall sweeps data, Saturday's 3½-hour giant grabbed a 38 rating, up from last spring's 37 rating.

Univision continued its reign, airing 22 of the top 25 shows. Telemundo Group had the No. 10 show among women 18 and older. Two Telemundo novelas ranked Nos. 9 and 10 among women 18 to 49 and 35 to 49; "MTV Internacional" ranked No. 7 among men 18 to 49 and 35 to 49. Otherwise, Univision broadcast the top 10 shows in each demographic category.

Telemundo points to gains among younger and male viewers and a 9% increase in network audience.

Univision executives look to the future. "We're thinking in five-year increments in terms of programming," said Joaquin Blaya, network president. "Not everything we do will be a success, but some new shows should help create a lineup that will take us where we want to be." Specifically, the network will introduce three new shows in March and April.

"Cristina," a live audience talk show, will slip into the Monday to Friday 5 p.m. slot, replacing a novela. The show will by hosted by Cristina Saralegui—"our Oprah Winfrey, our Dona Francisca," said Mr. Blaya.

A half-hour "People's Court"-type show called "El Juez" ("The Judge") will debut at an unspecified time period. "I'm not saying we came up with the original idea, we're just adapting them," he said.

Perhaps the most ambitious project is a currently untitled one-hour, Monday through Friday morning children's show. Offering a mix of educational programming and cartoons, the show enters the twilight zone of Spanish TV where a 3 rating has been termed a success.

Telemundo will enter the children's arena as well, planning a two-hour block of children's programming for Saturday for next fall or early 1990, according to Carlos Barba, senior VP-programming. "We have strong competition from general market TV at that time and need to address and attract that audience," he said.

This fall the network will try to increase young adult viewing with "America Dance," a one-hour program that will air close to "MTV Internacional." Univision plans to grab Saturday night viewers with a 13-week "Saturday Night Live"-type show airing at 11 p.m. hosted by comedian Paul Rodriguez.

Telemundo also is planning a prime-time half-hour sitcom that will feature a Mexican woman married to a Cuban man. "It will be our version of Lucy and Desi," Mr. Barba said.

PUBLISHER GIVES PRINT NEW IMAGE

Manny Casiano thinks U.S. Spanish-language magazine publishers are going about their business the wrong way.

"They try to satisfy everybody and end up not satisfying anybody," said the chairman and editor in chief of San Juan, Puerto Rico-based Casiano Communications. "You cannot satisfy all Hispanics with one publication. The guy in Miami doesn't care about what's happening in Texas."

For that reason, Mr. Casiano will introduce Imagen Northeast next month in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. The monthly is an offshoot of 3-year-old Imagen, a monthly lifestyle publication focusing on Puerto Rico's middle and upper-income families. Mr. Casiano expected December 1988 ABC-audited figures to show a 71,000 circulation, up from 60,000 in June.

Northeast will guarantee 30,000 circulation, of which Mr. Casiano hopes to sell 15,000 to 20,000 on 2,500 newsstands. He projects Northeast, which will carry a $2.50 cover price, to hit 50,000 circulation by yearend. The launch is being backed by a $500,000 TV, radio, direct-marketing campaign.

Ads comprise 22 pages of the launch issue's 120-page folio. Rates are $1,600 for a b&w page; $2,200 for color.

Mr. Casiano expects agencies will respond to the publication's audited circulation, saying existing publications are using "wild numbers."

Meg Bernot, media director, Publicidad Siboney, said its regional nature and Imagen's track record make Northeast attractive. "Enough products are targeted regionally in the market that this makes sense," she said.

Ms. Bernot said the new magazine's biggest competitor will be Ahora, a Univision publication due out this fall that will offer regional buys and an estimated 500,000 national circulation.

Manny Casiano, publisher of Puerto Rico's Imagen, says regionalization is the key to print success on the mainland.

Depending on Northeast's growth, Mr. Casiano will launch three other regional editions to serve Florida, Chicago/Texas and Southwest/California Hispanic markets.

He said quality competition would benefit Northeast. "How can advertisers justify spending the money producing print ads for a single magazine? We need more quality publications that can interest advertisers."

SHOP TALK

AGENCIES SEARCH FOR '90s FORMULA

Carlos Rossi, ceo of Conill Advertising, sums up the current state of the Hispanic agency business: "It's getting kind of interesting."

Facing market growth and its attendant competitiveness, Hispanic shops are searching for the right formula to create the next decade's ideal agency structure.

Mr. Rossi will steer Conill in two directions: inward and outward. The apparent contradiction reflects his assertion that Hispanic shops must be both a nationally oriented full-service agency and local retail specialist.

Conill will create an agency within an agency, with a separate staff dedicated to servicing local accounts. "Some local accounts are bigger than national clients, and clients are going [in the direction of regional marketing]," he said.

Conill also is setting its sights on becoming a one-stop agency, adding direct marketing and public relations. "We will be better prepared for a recession as a marketing services company. Clients may cut back on advertising, but not on promotion," Mr. Rossi said.

The promotional push is fueling a move to outlying offices. "Media and creativity can be done anywhere. I feel driven to open other offices because of promotions," said Paul Casanova, president, Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad.

Font & Vaamonde Associates is shopping for office space in San Antonio and recently opened offices in Los Angeles and Miami to bolster sales promotion capabilities.

"The Los Angeles office is being built as a full-service branch to also pitch local accounts, however," said Jeffrey Stein, exec VP, Grey Advertising, FoVa's partner. "There is enormous potential in local activity." FoVa will open a Chicago office by yearend primarily to service clients' promotional needs, he said.

It will have company. Mr. Rossi said, "We will be there [Chicago] by the end of 1989," and perhaps Miami and San Antonio.

Satellite offices are the only way the big will get bigger, said Roger Pisani, exec VP-managing director of Publicidad Siboney. "The greater your revenues, the better chance you have of attracting limited talent, doing better creative and getting more clients."

The move to outlying full-service offices will be limited because the business volume does not make it economically feasible, said Tere Zubizarreta, president, Zubi Advertising, Miami.

"Unless you got a $4 million account that demands more than service, it's hard to justify," said Mr. Casanova.

Dick Dillon, president of Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados, prefers to handle all activities out of his headquarters, "like Leo Burnett. I don't think satellites are necessarily going to produce more business." Clients want the best creative minds and account managers, and "those probably will be in the main office," he said.

■ Jorge Reynardus, former VP, general manager of Castor Spanish International, has formed Hispanic Advertising & Marketing Services, New York. The agency will target both marketers and general market agencies. "Every major Hispanic agency has a general market agency partner. We're here for the general market shops that don't have a partner," Mr Reyardus said.

PRODUCT AND ACCOUNT ACTIVITY

Procter & Gamble Co. will announce in San Antonio today "Fiesta Gigante," one of the company's largest 1989 Hispanic market promotion.

Don Francisco, the host of Spanish-language TV's No. 1 show, "Sabado Gigante," will headline the live events, which are being described by retailers familiar with the program as a combination variety show and product exposition. Other top Hispanic entertainers such as Lucha Villa and Alvaro Torres will be featured.

The first event will be held at San Antonio's Alamo Stadium on Feb. 18. It will travel to Houston, Santa Ana, Calif., and close at Belvedere Park in Los Angeles on March 26.

Bounty, Charmin, Crest, Downy, Folgers, Head & Shoulders, Pampers, Peptol-Bismol, Scope, Secret and Tide will be featured at on-site booths and in retail promotions. Consumers will receive a $2 or $5 discount off ticket prices with proof of purchase of one or two products, respectively.

P&G may open the event to other sponsors. The event and promotions will be backed by a TV, radio and print campaign. Ad budgets and event costs were not disclosed.

"For two or three years, P&G has been involved in special events with brand advertising, sales promotion and retail overlays. This is one of the biggest one to combine the elements," said Robert Jordan, Hispanic marketing manager-West.

"We're listening and responding to the needs of our retail customers and consumers," he said.

■ L.A. Gear breaks a sweepstakes promotion this week on Telemundo Group's "MTV Internacional," representing the company's first venture into Spanish-language TV. The winner will appear on the show as a guest video jockey, and receive a trip to a concert.

■ Winchell's Donut Houses to Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad on a project basis.

Winchell's "had made the classic mistake of just translating our English ads," said Kevin Murphy, VP-marketing and sales. The company primarily wants to start a dialogue with Hispanics in Southern California where it has strong store penetration. "Anybody in this business who is not making some kind of effort is being myopic."

The new campaign probably will break in the second quarter and expand "everywhere where it's appropriate," Mr. Murphy said.

■ McDonald's Southeast Florida Association to Pantin Partnership, a newly formed Miami-based public relations agency, for South Florida general market and Hispanic market public relations.

■ Universal Studios estimated $1 million account to Valdes Zacky & Associates.

■ Heublein Inc. to IAC Advertising Group on a project basis in South Florida for Jose Cuervo Tequila and Cognac Biscuit.

■ White Rose Food Corp. assigned ad responsibilities for its Met Food Supermarket to Spanad, which has changed its name from SpanAmerica.

■ Frito-Lay, which named Martinez & Associates its first Hispanic agency of record (AA, Jan. 9), ran an ad in Fortune today lauding the agency as its 1988 Minority Business Enterprise of the Year. Martinez had handled the company's Hispanic public and community relations program and minority business development efforts.

Martinez also was assigned Southwestern Bell's Minority and Women's Business Enterprise Program.

Grocery volume, dollar sales climb

By ALAN B. MILLER JR.

Grocery product unit sales grew only slightly in 1988, but dollar increases did a little better.

In the 475 package-goods product categories tracked by SAMI/Burke, total unit volume rose 1.5% and dollars were ahead 4.2% for the 52 weeks ended Nov. 4. One year earlier, the growth rate was 0.8% in units and 2.2% in dollars.

Inflation, drought-caused shortages and a change in product mixes to higher-quality items are among the reasons for the dollar increases.

New-product activity fell slightly in 1988. During the first 44 weeks of the year, 2,294 new brands appeared in one or more of SAMI's 54 markets, down 1.9% from a year earlier.

Still, volume gains in many grocery product categories can be traced to new-product activity, especially microwave products.

A gain of 191% in the miscellaneous prepared foods category is directly traceable to the rollouts of Top Shelf by Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Lunch Buckets by Dial Corp. and Minute Gourmet by Beatrice/Hunt-Wesson. Microwave popcorn sales increased 41.8%. Microwave frozen milkshakes made their appearance, and there were big gains for such microwave items as dessert baking mixes; canned meat stew, poultry products, chili and pasta dishes; and frozen fish, pot pies and prepared vegetables.

A new SAMI study of microwaveable product trends showed such items accounted for a little more than $1.7 billion in sales for the year ended Oct. 7. These products are found in 56 different product categories.

Shortages caused by last summer's drought and heat wave affected several categories. For example, lower water levels in the spawning grounds led to a 32.5% poundage decline in canned salmon for the 12 weeks ended Nov. 4.

In the canned vegetables category, declines ran 32.2% for peas, 23.6% for corn and 15.6% for green beans for the same period.

A number of health or diet factors help explain trend lines in other categories. Hot cereals, where oats was a health-associated buzz word, enjoyed a 12-week dollar gain of 24.2%. Ready-to-eat cereals with high bran or fiber content experienced a 27.6% gain. Light or low-calorie offerings were in vogue as evidenced by the 12-week increases for light canned peaches (23.6%), low-calorie salad dressings (31.6%) and low-cal mayonnaise/spoonable salad dressing (39.1%).

The increase in smaller households led to a growing volume for products in single-serve packaging. Portion packs helped expand the applesauce category's volume by 26%.

Del Monte USA's shelf-stable yogurt shack packs led to a gain of 112% in its category. Aseptic packs of juices and drinks are still growing at a rapid rate—17.1%.

In the dry grocery-non-foods area, only 10 categories showed dollar growth of 10% or more.

Dishwasher additives topped the list; sales gains by Eenckiser Consumer Products USA's Jet Dry helped lift the category by 46.5%. Adult incontinence products reported a 40.5% gain.

In the health & beauty aids segment, there were 11 product categories with 52-week growth rates of more than 10%. Feminine hygiene deodorants led with 29.2%, a result of the rollout of Beecham Products USA's Massengill feminine towelettes.

Suntan lotion and oil gained 15.9%, aided by an increase in the sale of sunscreens. Mouthwash volume grew 15.1%.#

The following correction and restatements are for profiles in ADVERTISING AGE'S "100 Leading National Advertisers" report appearing Sept. 28, 1988:

- Coniston Partners was the major participant in Gillette Co.'s buyback of 16 million shares, not the recipient of the $720 million repurchase at $45 per share (P. 78).
- The American Brands office supply units, Master Lock Co., Prestige Group, Acushnet Co. and Foot-Joy, were part of American Brands before the E-II purchase, which added Day-Timers and Vogel Peterson, among others, to the division (P. 4).
- AT&T Co.'s headquarters are at 550 Madison Ave., New York 10022-3297. Mark Schoenfeld is senior VP-account manager (P. 16).
- Warner-Lambert Co. incorrectly reported its product assignments. The correct roster is as follows: for the American Chicle Group, J. Riney angles for $50M

Saturn dealers charmed by shop

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Hal Riney & Partners is in line for an additional $40 million to $50 million in Saturn business from dealer groups.

Enthusiasm for Mr. Riney and his San Francisco-based agency by Saturn Corp.'s new dealers indicates that business will be added to an estimated $80 million to $100 million in factory advertising.

The first 26 Saturn dealers were introduced last week at the 72nd annual National Automobile Dealers Association convention in New Orleans.

Mr. Riney, who was at that meeting, said the agency is "involved in most of the discussions about all of the things that are going on, from positioning to the look of the dealerships themselves—most of the things that will eventually affect Saturn's image."

Even though it's a year and a half before the first Saturn cars hit the market, the agency has already contributed to Saturn sales by "selling" some top dealer prospects on signing for a franchise.

"Riney helped close me," said Robert Maguire, using the expression that salesmen use to describe a deal clincher. Mr. Maguire is a Bordentown, N.J., Chevrolet dealer who has the Saturn franchise for the central New Jersey area.

He said he was particularly impressed with a 3-minute film the agency produced for internal Saturn use, titled "The Love Affair With the Automobile."

"I was just that much more impressed with Saturn. I thought, if his agency's going to be involved with the marketing of Saturn, I want to be a Saturn dealer," Mr. Maguire said.

John Campbell III, who acquired the Saturn franchise for the Anaheim-Whittier area in California, said of the film, "It tugged at me. It was the kind of approach that got you emotionally involved with the product."

Mr. Campbell said he believes Saturn advertising will take an emotional approach.

He and Mr. Maguire both said they favored Riney handling dealer group work for their areas.

Saturn dealers will be free to choose their own agency for regional ad work, but Saturn will encourage them to go with Riney, said Donald Hudler, VP-marketing. "We would hope that it would be Riney, because we can have a more consistent message."

Saturn brings prospective dealers to Michigan for thorough briefings on the company before they make any commitments (an initial investment of $2 million to $4 million is needed for a franchise).

During their stay, Saturn executives discuss the lengthy selection process used to choose an agency, then show examples of Riney's work, including "Love Affair," a reel of commercials for other clients and a film shot near the Saturn assembly facility in Spring Hill, Tenn., which shows youngsters talking about their perceptions of Saturn.

The film with children was used in

Ad columnists duke it out at 'Times,' 'Wall St. Journal'

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK—News coverage of media, marketing and advertising issues has become a cornerstone in the fight for ad dollars between The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times.

WSJ stepped up the battle last week with the launch of its first-ever "Advertising" column, written by reporter Joanne Lipman, 27, to serve as the linchpin of the newspaper's "Marketing & Media" page.

The column is a clear-cut counterpoint to the Times' own long-running "Advertising" column, which anchors the newspaper's daily "Media Business" page in the "Business Day" section. The Times column is written by Randall Rothenberg, 32.

Hanging in the balance for each paper is revenue from media advertisers, which use adjacencies to both columns to reach agency media planners and senior marketing executives.

Possibly more important, the media and marketing pages also represent anchors as each paper attempts to gain new advertisers and regain lost linage following a yearlong slump.

It's too soon to judge the value of Ms. Lipman's column, a number of agency and media executives said. But it's also too early to judge the effectiveness of Mr. Rothenberg, who was named advertising columnist in October after the unexpected death of longtime columnist Philip Dougherty.

It was during Mr. Dougherty's tenure that the Times' ad column became a magnet for media advertisers; for those unable to receive mention in Mr. Dougherty's column, it was important to be near it.

"It is a little too early to say who is winning the competition, but considering their lack of proximity to the street, Madison Avenue, the Journal is doing a pretty good job," said Leo Scullin, senior VP-director of print relations at Young & Rubicam.

On Monday, Jan. 30, Ms. Lipman's debut column began with a news item about two leading ad agencies. The Times column that day was dominated by an item about a new cable TV show based on Cable Guide, and ran in its usual place inside the "Business Day" section.

But the Times countered the next day by uncharacteristically starting Mr. Rothenberg's column on the front page of the section and keeping it there for three days straight.

As far as advertising goes, Time magazine at least recognized the step WSJ was taking and ran a full-length, half-page ad, costing about $45,000, adjacent to Ms. Lipman's first column.

"We ran in the Monday to take advantage of the additional publicity that would go with the start of the new column," said Ellen Oppenheim,

Coke hits Pepsi's counterpunch

ATLANTA—Coca-Cola USA blasted Pepsi-Cola Co.'s new rebuttal spot last Friday and said it's challenging the commercial with the TV networks. Pepsi is putting heavy media weight behind the spot lampooning Diet Coke's claim that Diet Coke is gaining ground against sugared Pepsi. The Diet Pepsi spot says Diet Pepsi is gaining ground against Diet Coke and pokes fun at Diet Coke's 3-D effort on Super Bowl XXIII (see earlier story on Page 4). Agencies are BBDO Worldwide, New York, for Pepsi and Lintas:New York for the Diet Coke spots.

Florida-type ad tax surfaces

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Oregon and South Dakota threw down the ad-tax gauntlet last week with proposals unnervingly reminiscent of what triggered a battle in Florida.

Although the South Dakota measure would extend the state's 4% sales tax to all in-state advertising, including media billings and creative, the Oregon bill generated greater waves of concern within the advertising, broadcasting and film industries.

Already a meeting has been scheduled for Feb. 10 in Portland between officials of the Oregon Department of Revenue, which proposed the measure, and as many as 30 representatives from affected industries, including advertising.

The Oregon bill is considered more troublesome by the ad industry's state-monitoring arm, the State Advertising Coalition, for at least two major reasons:

- It could prompt other states to embrace similar proposals.
- It relies on an audience-viewing formula that first appeared in the Florida tax fight two years ago and which, if widely accepted, would provide a surer path to direct taxation of local and national advertising.

On its surface, the Oregon measure appears to be a concern for broadcasters; its main thrust is to allow the state to levy its 6.6% gross receipts tax on the revenues of CBS, ABC, NBC and other broadcast and cable networks not headquartered in Oregon.

The Oregon bill also appears to carry at least the tacit approval of newly elected Democrat Gov. Neil Goldschmidt. Revenue department Administrator James Brown said all legislation proposed by state agencies goes across Gov. Goldschmidt's desk before being introduced in the Legislature.

According to advertising and broadcasting industry analyses, the Oregon bill would apply the state's gross receipts tax to network revenues in a ratio determined by Oregon's percentage of the network's national viewing audience.

Because ad revenues comprise the bulk of network income, the Oregon initiative gives pause to advertisers.

"That apportionment scheme could be used in other contexts for national advertising," said American Advertising Federation Senior VP Wally Snyder. "We oppose this measure . . . and would want to discourage states from taxing corporations outside their borders. If all 50 states, or even two or three, do it, it becomes very burdensome for corporations, whether it's under a sales tax, gross receipts tax or what."

That formula of relying on state audience as percentage of national audience was at the heart of Florida's attempt to levy its sales tax on national advertising.

The Oregon measure was a major topic of concern within the ad industry last week as it pondered the bill's potential for setting a precedent and its reach for businesses outside the state.

The bill is so potentially troublesome that it overshadowed last week's introduction in the South Dakota Legislature of a bill to tax advertising. That bill would repeal in-state

IBM's new shops roll out first ads

By JON LAFAYETTE

IBM Corp. has discharged most members of the "M*A*S*H" cast who'd been featured in the computer marketer's ads since April 1987.

Alan Alda, however, has a long-term contract, and any future role is "under development," the company said. The actor joined his former TV series colleagues in January 1988.

The slogan "The bigger picture" has also been scrapped, but its successor is unclear.

The first network TV commercials from Lintas:New York, one of IBM's two new agencies, began airing late last month for the PS/2. Those spots close with the line, "When you're thinking ahead, you're thinking IBM."

Though the line was part of Lintas' presentation that won the account, it probably won't be used in long-term campaigns.

IBM also launched a new print campaign last week for its AS/400 midrange computer via Wells, Rich, Greene, its other new agency.

The agencies replaced Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, which lost the $138 million account after its senior executives walked out to form a new agency last year.

IBM plans to launch an umbrella campaign in the second quarter for the PS/2, which is facing stiff competition from a group of rival personal computer marketers. Product-specific ads via Lintas will support the umbrella campaign, the IBM spokesman said.

At the same time, IBM plans to launch what it calls a market-image umbrella campaign via WRG. The effort is intended to show how IBM responds to customer needs and solves problems, the spokesman said. WRG is also working on a new corporate campaign.

In the meantime, WRG has placed a multipage corporate ad in current editions of business magazines. The ad, similar to one done by Lord Geller a year ago, shows new products and innovations.

IBM's plan for a layered advertising effort reflects the company's hierarchical and bureaucratic structure. Despite efforts to streamline its marketing and advertising departments, all decisions apparently still pass through a staggering number of approval layers, causing delays.

The process is made more complicated by continuing turnover in IBM's marketing ranks, sources said.

At the same time, the agencies' job has been made more difficult because the assignments given Lintas and WRG overlap to a certain extent. This arrangement already has led to intramural rivalries and turf fights.#

Yugo shop mulls filing $2.8M suit

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Yugo America agency Lambert/-Dale says it plans to sue a Wall Street investment banking company if it can't collect on Yugo's approximately $2.8 million advertising-related debts.

Most of this debt is owed to media and production-related companies.

Paul Lambert, the New York agency's president, said Mabon, Nugent & Co., a major stockholder in Yugo parent Global Motors, directed operations for Yugo America, the importer and marketer of the low-price car.

But the investment company denied that its involvement extended beyond financial advice, setting the stage for a court fight that would be closely watched in ad circles if Global Motors fails in its reorganization attempt.

Global Motors last week filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law. At the same time, the car's Yugoslavian manufacturer, Zavodi Crvena Zastava, assumed management responsibility and promised an infusion of cash to reorganize the company.

The Chapter 11 filing lists Lambert/Dale as the largest unsecured creditor. Mr. Lambert said the $2.8 million includes about $400,000 owed to the agency in fees, with the rest owed on orders placed by Lambert/Dale acting as agent for Yugo America.

College magazines—the next generation

Where publishing heavyweights tried and failed, a new batch tests their mettle with lean, highly targeted books

By Patrick Reilly

The sudden boom in new national magazines for the college market is proving that one publisher's debacle can be another's opportunity.

Following last spring's demise of three national college magazines from major publishers—Newsweek on Campus, McGraw-Hill Inc.'s Business Week Careers and Whittle Communication's Campus Voice—publishers appeared unable to bear the high costs of producing slick magazines for college students.

That shakeout has partly triggered a flood of new campus publications, many of which are more highly targeted and operate with lower overheads but still attract national advertisers.

"The campus market is really picking up again with some promising publications," says Shannon Eadon, VP-associate media director, Rosenfeld, Sirowitz, Humphrey & Strauss, New York. "What old and new publishers have learned is that distribution has to be targeted and the editorial has to speak to students' real needs."

A number of major publishers and media companies have kept their hand in the college market, where the estimated enrollment is more than 12 million, according to the Center for Education.

For example, Time Inc. acquired Dorm magazine in 1987, changed its name to Student Life, and redesigned the twice-a-year magazine in 1988. Whittle relaunched Campus Voice in August 1988 on 360 campuses as a free-standing kiosk, carrying editorial panels covering jobs & careers, news and leisure. And in November, U.S. News & World Report Inc. formed a partnership with the publisher of CampusUSA to launch CampusUSA Wallboards in March (See story below).

Close behind them are many new or recently launched college magazines or media properties. While advertisers and agency media directors say they are cautious about the publications, observers say the new crop holds some promise.

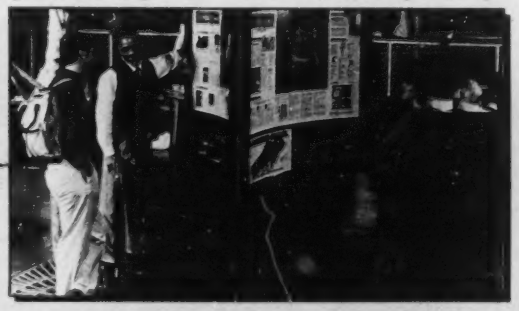
Taking college boards seriously

Whittle, CampusUSA battle for wall space, students' eyes as marketers try to capture attention on campus

By Leslie Gilbert

CampusUSA magazine is going to the wall for college students, launching its new Wallboard media program in March.

The program is similar to the editorial wall media programs Whittle Communications has championed for the last eight years, first as The Wallpaper Journal and now as Campus Voice. Unlike Whittle, CampusUSA, a joint venture between U.S. News & World Report Inc. and Collegiate Marketing & Communications, has no plans to preempt its quarterly magazine in favor of the every-other-weekly Wallboard program.



Campus Voice kiosks are on 360 campuses and are expected to hit gross revenues of $10.5 million for the school year.

According to Bill Harris, exec VP of U.S. News & World Report, "We want to keep a presence in [the college] market as much for the future as for today." CampusUSA should fare better than many of the college magazines because its costs are lower, he says.

"A magazine is a terrific vehicle to reach the broad-based college market," says Dan Snyder, CM&C president. "Wallboards reach market [segments] within the college market."

CampusUSA Wallboards focus on eight subjects: business, computers, health, men's life, music, night life, sports and women's life. Editorially, Campus Voice wall media focuses on three areas: news, leisure and careers.

Rebecca Scroggins, exec VP-publisher of Wallboards and former marketing director at Whittle Communications, says Wallboards make more sense than magazines for some advertisers. "Wallboard is designed for impact, awareness and continuous presence so it makes sense for impulse items and for new products."

Joe Venaglia, president of College Market Consultants, agrees. "For the advertiser who is now learning to communicate in 15 seconds, I would recommend [wall media] because they give maximum exposure, and immediate and repetitive impact."

David Pugliese, AT&T college market manager says, "Wall media is a critical component of our media plan because it's an interactive medium. College newspapers are the largest component and magazines vary the most from plan to plan because they come and go so frequently."

AT&T began advertising with Whittle when the wall media program still had one advertiser per board instead of the two now featured. "Personally, I like an exclusive position, but the key is that the actual editorial piece is at-

Freshman class of magazines demonstrate potential

The market looked bleak for college magazines this time last year. Big-name publishers, backed by deep pockets, were dropping out, indicating a less than healthy future for college magazines.

A new class of magazines is stepping in to fill the vacancy, however, with an eye toward eliminating distribution glitches that have plagued the medium. A selection of new college publications includes:

■ CV, The College Magazine from Millicom Inc. The title stands for "career vision and campus vision," says Marian Salzman, president and editor in chief.

The premiere issue will be distributed to 250 colleges, including 60 "traditionally black" campuses, early this month with an estimated circulation of more than 1 million. CV will distribute about 60% through the career placement office on campus but will also insert copies into the campus newspaper. The magazine will appear six times a year with an editorial focus on careers and lifestyle. Advertisers in premiere issue include Nissan, Apple Computer and Smith-Corona.

■ Volume, a general-interest magazine due in the fall from Alan Weston Communications.

In prototype now, Volume will appear twice each semester, with 1.2 million controlled circulation, mailed directly to students at campuses. It will offer male/female demographic editions to advertisers.

The magazine will use "contract publishing" techniques such as offering product exclusivity for advertisers buying an entire year of issues, and limit the number of ad pages per issue to about one-third.

"Advertisers are being challenged to find ways to break through the clutter, and [Volume] offers them the chance," according to President Larry Smuckler. Each issue will be based around a special theme "universally important to the generation," he says. The four themes are sex, humor, photojournalism, plus an "interactive" issue.

The company is implementing one overall ad rate—$58,000 per page—for both b&w and color ads and have different rates for the women and men-targeted advertiser, $47,100 and $34,125 respectively.

■ Eyes, a "serious" monthly newsmagazine from TenFifty Publications due March 9 on several California campuses, including UCLA and Stanford. It is billed as the "newsmagazine for the next generation."

The circulation will be about 100,000 through inserts in college newspapers and direct mailings to students and parents. Plans are to expand to 200,000 circulation in 1990 and expand to national distribution.

■ Whittle Communications will launch a new college magazine in the fall with a single sponsor—possibly a major cosmetic marketer—according to sources close to the company. Chairman Christopher Whittle did not confirm the launch and says only the company is developing several new properties aimed at the college market.

■ Great Opportunities For Today's Collegian, a once-a-semester magazine that is essentially a catalog of ads with coupons.

The title comes from Follett Corp., the largest contract manager of college bookstores. Follett will distribute more than 1 million copies of Great Opportunities each January and August at about 300 Follett-operated bookstores. The debut issue in January carried ads from Radio Shack, Sears Discover card and CBS/Columbia House, among others.

Generation

Key to their success will be solving one problem that has plagued earlier attempts. Many magazines failed to attract national advertisers because of poor distribution.

"You can have the most wonderful editorial product and if it doesn't get into students hands, it's wasted for the advertiser," says Jonathan Bulkeley, publisher of Student Life. "You don't want to end up as campus junk."

A number of college magazines now use direct mail to ensure delivery. Student Life, with a circulation of about 1.2 million, is mailed directly to student post office box numbers at 570 campuses.

Campus Connection, a 6-year-old annual guide magazine, published by Uncommon Solutions uses a mass distribution method for its 81 different editions going to 256 campuses with copies distributed by local student organizations.

"The distribution has gotten better as the competition has increased," says Eric Weil, president of Strategic Marketing Communications, publisher of College Marketing Annual.

Beyond distribution, industry observers say the new batch of publications are simply offering a better editorial product.

Ms. Eadon says established magazines such as Student Life are now more credible, while new ones such as CV and Volume "look like they might be strong. The problem remains an editorial one. The successful college magazine is tuning into students' needs, providing information on campus entertainment or careers or general news issues that affect them directly." □

Determining when kids become regular product users continues to be as elusive as the fountain of youth

By Beth Bogart

While marketers, researchers and ad agencies aren't sure when brand loyalty is established among youths, no one wants to enter the marketing fray too late.

"Companies are realizing the importance of the youth market, such as car companies who want to develop brand loyalty, knowing that college students who buy lower-priced models will eventually be upgrading," says Robin Sanderson, senior VP at MarketSource, a target marketing company.

"It appears loyalties are being formed earlier and earlier," says Stuart Hochwert, exec VP, American Passage, a full-service marketing and media company. The rise in single-parent households and the pervasiveness of TV advertising are major reasons, he says.

"Kids are doing more and more of the shopping," Mr. Hochwert says. "While parents may have a preference, a teen-ager often has a suggestion of his own."

Increasingly, companies are advertising to the age bracket just younger than the age group that actually will purchase and use their product, Mr. Hochwert says.

Marketers don't create trends, they simply alter strategies to meet existing trends, says Irving Plonskier, who monitors high school and college print publications as print services supervisor at Young & Rubicam, New York. "The way lifestyles have changed means teens have more money and freedom," he says. "They don't have to go to dad for $5 for the movies, they make that decision alone."

Beth Bogart is a free-lance writer based in Washington D.C.

Ms. Sanderson contends teen loyalties are anything but permanent. MarketSource research indicates 50% of students switch brands on certain products when they enter college. Last December's The College Panel survey—a joint effort of MarketSource and Decisions Center Inc.—shows 66% switch shampoo; 45%, shaving cream; 42%, mouthwash, and 37%, toothpaste.

"It cuts both ways," she says. "You could say 50% not changing shows brand loyalty developed young, or the fact that 50% changed shows that college students are open to changing loyalty."

MarketSource began researching the college market in 1975, but has now expanded to include teens, young children and their mothers.

American Passage also is moving toward younger kids, having unveiled GymBoards last September. GymBoards consist of three panels: one a chalkboard, one for articles aimed at youths and the third for an advertiser. They are currently in the locker rooms of 2,000 junior and high schools, says Mr. Hochwert, adding that Gillette Co. and Procter & Gamble Co. have been regular advertisers.

Gillette recently launched an ad campaign for Atra razor blades aimed at high school and college men after company research indicated that loyalty was strong among men older than 40, but non-existent among younger men. "The commercials are an emotional appeal aimed at communicating a new, aggressive image for Atra," says Michele Szynal, assistant manager of corporate media relations. "We're targeting younger men to try and regain that loyalty."

Predicting the changing tastes of American youth is difficult because most studies target specific age groups and do not follow a group's preferences over time. Researchers may know that changes in preference have occurred, but may not know why, say industry sources. Ms. Sanderson says The College Panel is working on tracking changes in college students' tastes as they move into adulthood—one of the first efforts of its kind.

Mr. Hochwert says the most surprising trend he has seen in the last two years is cooking and baking supplies marketers placing ads that target the college market, once the sole domain of women's services magazines.

"Word of mouth velocity is very important to the youth market," he says. "News travels fast if it's good, twice as fast if it's bad." [ ]

'Kids are so fickle'

Children don't have long-term loyalties, according to Karen Forcade, president of Youth Research, Brookfield, Conn., a company that conducts studies with children as young as 6 years old for clients such as ABC, Chesebrough-Pond's, General Foods, Hallmark Cards, Nabisco Brands and Ralston Purina.

Karen Forcade

"Right now, there isn't any way to accurately forecast with children. Kids are so fickle, it's really either hit or miss," she says.

The key to gaining what loyalty kids have is to first use advertising to catch their attention and to then develop new accessories so they don't get bored with the product, Ms. Forcade says. "Everything for children and even teens is media driven, and if their peer group has it then they want it." To that end, Youth Research screens for "outgoing, trendsetting kids" in junior high and high school.

"We're looking for kids who are the captain of the football team or a cheerleader because they're the kids who are going to set the style," Ms. Forcade says.

Youth Research then centers its efforts on trying to reach these kids. "Developing media strategies is hard, even finding the right words," she says. "Two years ago it was 'awesome,' but that's passe now."

DIRECT MARKETING

Agencies see slowing growth

Wunderman reports billings drop

By ALISON FAHEY

Several of the nation's largest direct-response agencies failed to meet executives' expected 1988 growth rates.

Ogilvy & Mather Direct and FCB Direct fell short of projections of 10%-to-15% growth; other agencies had forecast "modest" increases.

Many direct-response agencies posted only single-digit gains in 1988, faced with a mature direct-marketing industry, cutbacks in client spending spurred by the October 1987 stock market tumble and an uncertain economy.

The gains represent a steep decline from direct-response agencies' heyday in the early 1980s when growth averaged 30% (AA, Jan. 11, 1988).

The single-digit growth rates for other leading direct-response agencies are in line with the overall expected 1988 gains for general ad agencies of about 7%.

Advertisers spent $2.4 billion in direct-response categories through agencies in 1987, the most recent year for which ADVERTISING AGE estimates are available.

A major client loss prevented Wunderman Worldwide, New York, from getting even a single-digit gain.

The Young & Rubicam direct-response agency saw a "modest decline" in billings in 1988, said Richard Stollenwerck, exec VP-group general manager. Yearend figures weren't available; in 1987, billings were $260 million.

Wunderman last year lost the IBM Corp. account to Grey Direct and completed a major portion of an AT&T Co. project.

"In general, clients were managing closer and asking more for less," Mr. Stollenwerck said.

"In the U.S., direct marketing is matured, established, and it's a market share fight," said Howard Draft, president, Kobs & Draft, Chicago.

Kobs & Draft's billings grew 5.9% to $90 million. Mr. Draft predicted 8%-to-10% domestic gains in 1989.

"The stock market crash contributed to the slowdown. Not only did financial services clients cut back spending but general companies spent more conservatively," said George Wiedemann, chairman and president at Grey Direct, New York.

"In the U.S., direct marketing is matured, established, and it's a market share fight."
—Howard Draft
President
Kobs & Draft

The agency's capitalized billings based on fee and commission income were up 5.9% to $108 million in 1988, but Mr. Wiedemann is feeling bullish about 1989.

"Grey Direct will do better [in 1989] than the category at large because of solid new business," he said.

During 1988, Grey picked up the U.S. Department of Treasury's $22 million U.S. Olympics coin account, along with business from New York Telephone Co. and Chemical Bank (AA, Jan. 23).

Grey expects double-digit gains in 1989 compared with single-digit growth for most direct-response agencies, Mr. Wiedemann said.

O&M Direct reported billings rose 4.6% to $272 million, said Howard Meiner, chief financial officer.

The slowdown is a result of spending cuts from financial services clients and a leveling off in growth of some key clients, said President William Morrissey.

But O&M's outlook for 1989 is one of the most optimistic among direct-response agencies. "We could easily get back to 15%-to-20% [gains], if not 10%," Mr. Morrissey said, noting a resurgence in new-client business.

Billings for FCB Direct, San Francisco, rose 2.7% to $151 million, said Freeman Gosden Jr., chairman-direct marketing, Foote, Cone & Belding Communications.

"It was not a magnificent year; it was generally tight," said Michael Seymour, president and chairman of MARCOA DR Group, New York, an Omnicom Group unit. "Our revenues are up and our income is up." Specific agency figures weren't available yet; in 1988, MARCOA's billings totaled $108 million.

Despite the leveling off of growth in recent years and the relatively dim forecast for 1989, many agency executives foresee another big growth curve in three to five years.

As data-base technology improves, direct-response agencies will be able to convince non-traditional fields to join the ranks of direct marketing.

Direct-response agencies "have to go after 'new tryers' that may not be using direct marketing," said Wunderman's Mr. Stollenwerck.#

Computers are standing by

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Network and cable TV stations could soon be jockeying for a larger share of promotional budgets because of new technology that greatly increases the number of callers who can respond simultaneously to TV spots.

The new, interactive telephone technology was developed by FDR Interactive Technologies, an American Express Co. affiliate.

It allows as many as 30,000 consumers to respond at once to promotional offers, advertising, consumer polls or other participatory programming.

"On an hourly basis, that translates into as many as 1.8 million calls.

Consumers can respond to offers via toll-free numbers or "900" numbers that carry a charge. At the direction of computerized voice messages, consumers can record responses by pressing buttons on the phone. The system also has the ability to "read" voices, translating them into digitized information collected by computers.

The system's capacity is its most distinctive feature. To match it, a live system would need 30,000 operators working the phones.

So far, the only national network equipped to handle 900-number calls, run by AT&T Co., is reported to have a capacity of 10,000 calls per minute.

Capital Cities/ABC Video Enterprises will be the first major broadcaster to test the FDR Interactive technology this spring through West Coast stations.

A launch of national programming could come as early as this fall, said Herb Granath, Cap Cities/-ABC Video president.

So far, no advertisers have signed up for the test.

"The most important use I see for cable and network is the potential to compete for promotional ad budgets," Mr. Granath said. "For instance, I could see Procter & Gamble running a one-minute spot for six products, with a $1-off offer at the end."

As many as 30,000 consumers can respond at once to participatory programming.

Consumers could call a toll-free number listed at the end of the commercial to get a coupon in the mail, he said.

Ronald A. Katz, FDR Interactive president-ceo, sees the same potential.

"Mass merchandisers have never really been able to move merchandise on TV" through promotions, he said, because there was no way to get immediate responses. "Now, it is highly likely that advertisers will find part or all of the cost of their advertising will be paid by the ability to sell through merchandise on TV."

Mr. Katz acknowledged that it's not clear yet how interested consumers will be in the technology.

MGM/UA Telecommunications also has signed on with FDR Interactive. MGM/UA plans to incorporate the interactive technology in "Hotline," a syndicated game show premiering this fall.

The show is believed to be the first major syndicated effort inviting interactive audience participation.

"The technology has tremendous potential to differentiate broadcasters," said Norman Horowitz, MGM/-UA president-ceo.

Also, Talisman Communications Corp. has signed with FDR Interactive and will be exploring applications for marketers. Talisman specializes in new interactive communications.

Its first effort will be a national time and weather 900-number sponsored by a major financial services or travel company, said Lisa Broderick, Talisman president-ceo. The line should be up and running in a few months, she said.

During the summer, another financial services marketer plans to test a toll-free response ad via network and spot commercials, she said.#

FOCUS ON RETAILING

Modest ad gains

Retailers plan 3.9% boost in '89

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Despite pressure to slash operating costs, retailers plan modest boosts in their ad budgets this year.

Ad spending, excluding co-op, will rise an average 3.9%, according to the Retail Advertising Conference's first survey of retail ad plans. Co-op budgets will be up an average 5.7%.

"Retailers could have reined in advertising for any number of reasons," said Douglas Raymond, RAC president. "But instead, their response to radical changes in the industry seems to be healthy, with smart merchants continuing to be aggressive risk-takers looking for new ways to sell."

RAC mailed its survey to all 380 of its retail members. Results of the survey are based on 96 replies, or a response rate of 25.3%.

In the survey, the spending outlook varies considerably by retail category. For instance, among rapidly growing mass merchandisers, ad budgets are expected to rise 5.2%.

But in the beleaguered department store category, large chains are raising ad spending only 3.3%, while small chains are expected to cut budgets by 1.1%.

On the competitive front, all eyes will be trained on the nation's No. 1 merchant, Sears, Roebuck & Co., which is due to start an ad blitz supporting its new "everyday low-price" strategy on March 1 (AA, Jan. 16).

Despite enormous publicity related to the change, details of Sears' strategy still aren't clear, and competitors remain uncertain about how its moves will affect their business.

Still, regardless of its strategy, Sears is likely to provoke a flurry of advertising responses from rivals.

Despite indications from the RAC survey, ad budgets could be hurt by retailers' renewed emphasis on customer service, said Robert Gottlieb, senior VP-director of marketing at Jordan Marsh Co.

Funds for hiring, training and rewarding sales staff will be drawn from ad budgets, he said, leaving retailers scrambling to make less advertising more productive.

"We can't afford it all. We have to establish priorities, and the biggest payback without a doubt is in the store," Mr. Gottlieb said.

"The customer service culture will either make or break . . . merchants in the 1990s," he said. "The plain truth is that you can get the customer in the store with advertising, but if you mistreat her at the sales counter, you lose her."

In 1989, stores also will continue to experiment with new media mixes and fresh programs to cultivate and maintain customer loyalty.

Direct mail, in particular, will become more important as merchants explore ways to target messages to customers.

In the RAC survey, retailers reported that an average 9.2% of ad budgets will be spent on direct-mail catalogs and another 5.6% on direct-mail brochures.

Combined, that places direct-marketing efforts at 14.8%, just behind newspaper inserts, which will consume 18.3% of spending, and newspaper run of press, the largest spending category at 36.7%.

Large department stores and women's, men's and children's specialty stores lead the catalog charge, with catalog budgets of 15.6% and 15%, respectively.

Small department stores direct 9% of their budgets at brochures; women's, men's and children's specialty stores spend 8.9% on brochures.

Despite widespread interest in TV advertising, retailers said they would commit only 10.8% of their ad budgets to that medium, with another 1.3% spent on cable.

Home furnishings stores (with 19.4% of their budgets in TV) and home repair/-hardware stores (with 17.2%) expressed the strongest interest in TV.

Women's, men's and children's specialty stores showed the weakest interest, with only 0.9% of their budgets allocated to TV.

Large and small department stores were also lukewarm about TV: They said they'd commit 7.4% and 6% of ad budgets to the medium, respectively.

The most notable finding for co-op advertising was a 0.1% falloff predicted for women's, men's and children's specialty stores.

"Specialty stores are fighting to keep their identities, so they're turning away from co-op, which tends to sell vendors' products at the expense of the store itself," RAC's Mr. Raymond said.

In line with traditional arrangements, most retail marketers (76.3%) handle ad budgets, excluding co-op, in-house.

The same is true of those using direct mail (excluding co-op); according to the survey, 86% of those marketers handle direct efforts themselves.#

Retailers seek to end era of price cuts

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Retailers will struggle this year to break free of ingrained price-cutting habits and to create new store formats that respond to customers' changing needs.

If they succeed, retail advertising could be transformed.

"In my opinion, this will be one of the most important years in retail advertising in the last 25 years," said Morris Saffer, chairman of Saffer Advertising, Toronto, and the Retail Advertising Conference.

Retailers' major effort in 1989 will be to pry themselves loose from price-cutting habits. During the past several years, price-oriented appeals have assumed increasing importance, gradually training consumers to become avid bargain shoppers.

Merchants scored their first victory during the recently ended Christmas season by controlling inventory and reducing the number of unplanned promotions featuring deeply discounted merchandise.

"You'll see an honest attempt at curtailing the '40% off' syndrome," predicted RAC President Douglas Raymond. "Retailers will get back to selling the stores as brands and stop giving the store away."

Experimentation with new store formats, such as hypermarkets and superstores, also will be an important theme as retailers search for ways to make shopping easy and enjoyable for consumers.

"We've reached a watershed point when the original concepts that fed the growth of a Sears, Montgomery Ward and Penney no longer hold," Mr. Saffer said. "Stores have to change completely to prepare themselves for the 1990s."

In the new retail environment, consumers will demand better information from stores and shop elsewhere if they're not convinced that a retailer has anything special to offer.

"Consumers are the smartest they've ever been" and less inclined than ever to swallow pitches based on hype, said Carol Farmer, president of Carol Farmer Associates. "To the consumer of today, loyalty is nothing more or less than the absence of something better."

In terms of advertising, this translates into a movement away from pure image ads. "Superficial, glossy image advertising will not work the same way for retailers anymore," Mr. Saffer predicted.

Instead, retailers' advertising will concentrate on specific selling points, emphasizing selection, pricing policy, service or unique merchandising strategies. The goal will be to nurture relationships with customers, not to make the quick sale.

Once their basic messages become known, merchants will be able to depend less on advertising to stimulate sales and rely more on the intrinsic strength of their stores. The store itself will become the primary marketing vehicle, Mr. Saffer said.

Three merchants that have contributed to the transformation of the retail industry also have pointed the way to this marketing future.

One is Wal-Mart Stores, the nation's third-largest and fastest-growing retailer, which has taught the industry the meaning of "everyday low prices."

In 1987, the most recent full year for which figures are available, Wal-Mart spent only $80.4 million on advertising, compared with $886.5 million for No. 1 ranked Sears, Roebuck & Co. and $631.8 million for No. 2 ranked K mart Corp.

Unlike K mart, which distributes weekly ad circulars promoting merchandise and sales, Wal-Mart produces only 12 to 13 circulars a year. The rest of the time it relies on loyal customers to come to its stores for value and selection.

Another groundbreaker is Toys "R" Us. It transformed toy retailing from a seasonal to a year-round business, helping to create the "super specialty store" concept along the way.

Despite its undisputed leadership position, Toys "R" Us spent only $13.9 million on measured media in 1987, according to Leading National Advertisers.

"They have no veneer, no aura—the marks by which merchants have traditionally distinguished themselves. They just happen to be a better place to buy children's merchandise than anyplace else," Mr. Saffer said.

The third example is The Limited, the nation's most powerful specialty women's apparel chain. It spent only $3.2 million on measured media in 1987, according to LNA, or a fraction of what its lumbering department store competitors spent.

The trick employed by The Limited is to make the fashion excitement, the merchandising appeal, the store image happen in the store. Virtually all its marketing budget goes to carefully planned and regularly changed in-store displays, Limited executives said.#

K mart's Fare-sized store

American Fare, K mart Corp.'s first hypermarket, opened 20 miles east of Atlanta Jan. 29. The 244,000-square-foot store, a joint venture with the Bruno's grocery chain, offers everything from produce to bicycles to clothing under one roof. Dilorio, Wergeles, New York, handles advertising.

New beers will tap into $40M advertising budget

By IRA TEINOWITZ

G. Heileman Brewing Co. will test in the U.S. Castlemaine XXXX, a popular brew marketed by Bond Brewing in Australia and the U.K.

Castlemaine will be marketed as either an import or an Australian-style domestic brew. Sources say it will be supported with advertising that uses the award-winning work done overseas by Saatchi & Saatchi, London.

In addition, Heileman will test in several markets the first dry malt liquor, under its Colt 45 brand, and break five regional ad campaigns for its other brands.

In the process, the brewer, owned by Bond Corp. Holdings, will make good on its pledge to increase marketing expenditures by boosting ad spending 25% this year to about $40 million.

"Last year, we demonstrated that we are here for the long term," said Ian S. Crichton, senior exec VP-marketing and sales for Heileman, referring to the company's first year as a Bond division. "We didn't just walk in, pour money in and

Nissan halts $35M print ad schedule

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Nissan Motor Corp. USA, in a stunning move, abruptly canceled its $35 million-plus consumer print schedule for the rest of the 1989 model year.

Nissan said it's shifting the entire print budget into additional spot TV time.

The print massacre hits Time, Newsweek, People and Rolling Stone the hardest. Sports Illustrated will get a limited number of racing-related ads; it, too, loses its larger product-ad schedule.

Only car and truck enthusiast publications escaped the knife.

"I'm in a state of shock," said Howard Smith, publisher of Newsweek, after getting the pullout confirmation from Nissan.

"We want to use the dollars freed up [from the print schedule] tactically, where they are needed," said Terry Foutz, Nissan national car advertising manager. "We want to align our national dollars with our regional dollars for a combined impact."

Mr. Foutz said the decision isn't an indictment of print. The company and agency Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif., debated the issue at length before taking the action, he said.

"It was a joint decision [between Nissan and the agency], and we support it," said Tom Patty, Chiat/Day exec VP-management supervisor, who called the move a response to a "tactical need."

"We had anticipated slightly lower pages from Nissan in 1989, but not to this extent," Newsweek's Mr. Smith said. "It is an abrupt and surprising turn for them."

Nissan's magazine ad spending had increased dramatically in recent years. The Japanese automaker spent $36 million in all consumer magazines last year, sources said, with $13 million, or 36%, going into the three major newsweeklies. In 1987, Nissan spent $19.6 million in all consumer magazines; $6.5 million, or 33%, of that went to the newsweeklies.

Nissan spends about $280 million in total media advertising through Chiat/Day—an estimated $200 million in national ads and $80 million in regional ads. The regional plan replaced spending formerly handled by Nissan dealer associations.

Nissan had "spent a lot of Military sounds TV retreat

By JANET MEYERS

WASHINGTON—Military recruitment advertising, accounting for about $200 million annually in recent years, is being slashed even as recruiting lags.

The deepest cuts are in TV, where the military in the 1980s used award-winning commercials to polish an image tarnished by Vietnam.

The U.S. Army, always the largest TV advertiser among the services, has cut its fiscal 1989 TV budget by 20% to $21.6 million. That's the Army's smallest TV spending plan in more than five years.

The Navy has no plans to buy TV time with its 1989 ad budget of $15 million. The Navy aired its first TV campaign from new agency BBDO Worldwide, New York, for six weeks last year; the effort's chances of resurfacing appear dim.

"We feel that with any budget below $20 million we don't have enough money to be on TV and make an impact," said Capt. Robert Kelly, Navy director of recruitment advertising. "We've gradually shifted from TV to radio, and next year we may have to downsize radio. Our purchasing power has never been lower."

The four services project combined paid TV spending of $40.8 million for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, a 33% decline from 1986.

The 1987 figure was $53.9 million and 1988's was $51.8 million.

Total military ad spending for all media and production will be about $185 million this fiscal year, down 10% from a high of $206 million in 1986.

The Marines' budget has shrunk so much that the Corps is ending a flight of TV spots earlier than expected and overhauling a public service campaign to help bolster recruiting.

Only the military's "corporate," or joint service, effort has been on the upswing.

The joint program, a generic appeal for youth to join the armed

Conn. catches ad-tax fever

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Connecticut jumped to the head of the "let's-tax-advertising" brigade last week with a legislative proposal to extend its 7.5% sales tax to state and national advertising.

At the same time, a Connecticut legislative committee was exploring the possibility of limiting or even eliminating the deductibility of advertising expenditures at the state level.

That fiscal one-two punch from the East overshadowed tax maneuverings in South Dakota, where the House voted 36-29 to defeat a proposal to revoke advertising's exemption from the state's 4% sales tax. Rep. Mark Hollenbeck (R., Rapid City), the bill's chief sponsor, said he'd try to resurrect the bill today.

Dennis Brown, director of the State Advertising Coalition, last week shuttled between informational meetings with the Black Hills Ad Club in Rapid City, S.D., and monitoring developments in the capital city of Pierre, where the ad-tax bill had won committee approval early last week and was awaiting the full floor vote.

The coalition was formed in 1986 to monitor state legislative and regulatory initiatives affecting advertising.

The ad-tax fever also is high in two other states, Oregon and Missouri, which are forging ahead with their own initiatives that, directly or indirectly, tax advertising.

Most of the attention, however, was focused on Connecticut, where tax clouds appear darkest.

"Connecticut has all the earmarks of a full-scale battle," said Association of National Advertisers Senior VP Dan Jaffe. "They seem to be very serious about this, so we're asking our [members] to talk to their legislators there as soon as possible."

The American Advertising Federation—with its strong grass-roots networks of ad clubs, agencies and media—was similarly alerting its members, both in South Dakota and Connecticut, Senior VP Wally Snyder said.

Sen. William DiBella (D., Hartford), chief sponsor of the Connecticut tax initiative, appears to be well

S&L ads tout fiscal health

By KATE FITZGERALD

The nation's solvent savings and loan associations, which spend about $850 million on advertising annually, are scrambling to shore up their images.

With heavy media coverage of President Bush's $60 billion plan to bail out 220 insolvent S&Ls, many of the largest and healthiest institutions are increasing local advertising and cooperative promotions to tout their strength. Others have produced new ads aimed at building customer confidence in an industry under a cloud.

There are about 2,800 solvent S&Ls in the U.S., industry sources say.

Despite the new efforts, total industry spending may not increase this year because some consultants are counseling S&Ls to keep a low profile, say sources at the Financial Institutions Marketing Association, which keeps track of spending.

"For many S&Ls, it's better to lie low right now and cut back their advertising the way airlines pull their ads after a jet crash," said Kevin Tynan, president of Kevin Tynan & Associates, a marketing consultancy.

"There's a lot of guilt by association in the industry, and even if an institution's perfectly solvent and healthy, advertising won't change the minds of irrational people," he said.

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions said it doesn't have funds budgeted to resurrect its umbrella campaign promoting the nation's S&Ls. A $6 million network TV effort from Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, ran last year.

"We haven't budgeted for additional advertising, and it doesn't appear likely," said Allan Friedman, VP-public relations for the league.

Instead, the league is sending out

Winners inspire 'Yearn to Learn'

CHICAGO—The "Yearn to Learn Challenge" advertising competition co-sponsored by ADVERTISING AGE and Scholastic Inc. has produced a dozen winners.

Entrants were invited to submit ads that would encourage youngsters to stay in school.

The 12 winners (see ads on Page 55) were selected from among 1,045 ads submitted by agencies, advertisers and individuals throughout the U.S. and Canada. The 40 certificate-of-merit winners will be notified soon.

"We were overwhelmed by the response to the 'Challenge,' " said Rance Crain, AD AGE editor in chief. "The caliber of entries was consistently high and reflected a great deal of care and research. We're grateful to everyone who took the time to submit an entry.

"In a competition of this sort, everyone is a winner—but the real satisfaction for all participants is in helping a discouraged youngster to see why it makes sense to finish school."

Leo Burnett Co. donated the creative work for the "Challenge" brochures and announcement ads, and R.R. Donnelley & Sons Co. donated printing for the brochures.

Judges were Gordon Ambach, executive director, Council of Chief State School Officers; Hall "Cap" Adams Jr., chairman-ceo at Burnett; Fred Danzig, editor, AD AGE; Philip B. Dusenberry, vice chairman and director, BBDO Worldwide, New York; Dick Robinson, president-ceo, Scholastic Inc.; Robert Wehling, VP-marketing services, Procter & Gamble Co.; New York City public high school students; associate editors of AD AGE; and editorial and design directors of Scholastic Inc.

Shops wage war over top execs

By JON LAFAYETTE

With high-power talent scarce, agencies are scrambling to hold onto top executives by matching the tempting offers they're getting from competitors.

At least four times in the past year, senior admen at various agencies received salary offers of more than $300,000 but rejected them after getting counteroffers from their current agencies, said Judy Wald, president of the Judy Wald Agency, a leading executive recruiting company.

Ms. Wald said such overwhelming counteroffers have been rare in the past, but these days "huge agencies don't want to lose good people."

Sometimes an agency can't afford to let one of its top people go, Ms. Wald said.

Some of the executives who accepted counteroffers stayed with agencies that were about to be sold, merged or restructured, she said. Without key executives in place, the deals could have fallen through.

Efforts to attract and keep talent are at a fever pitch, with three of the nation's top dozen agencies looking for creative directors (AA, Jan. 30). Many smaller agencies are also looking for leaders and are assembling equity packages they hope will lure executives from big shops.

For example, Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos was able to offer former Young & Rubicam Creative Director John Ferrell equity to get him to join its relatively small New York operation as exec VP-chief creative officer (AA, Jan 9).

Agencies are willing to spend more time and money to find good top-level candidates, said Laura Murphy, a principal at Baeder/Murphy/Associates, an executive search company.

With several new agencies establishing themselves on the West Coast and other agencies growing rapidly, "it's never been a healthier marketplace" for headhunters, she said.

Ms. Murphy said her company is sometimes tapped to keep an executive at a shop. "Agencies don't want us simply to place people," she said. "They want us to be a partner . . . sometimes we're called in to keep talent there."

But some agencies say they won't dismantle their salary structures to keep an employee who's received an incredible offer.

"If someone walks in and says someone else is going to double their salary, I'm not going to do anything," said Spencer Plavoukos, chairman-ceo of Lintas:New York. "But if it's someone we want and a raise is justified, we'll try to put something together."

Mr. Plavoukos said by the time a person has accepted an offer "he's made a psychological commitment to leaving," making it hard to change his mind.

Then again, some people seek better offers solely to improve the situation at their current agencies.

"Six years ago, I offered someone in account services [at another agency] a job and made him wealthy where he was," Mr. Plavoukas recalled.

"Our people get calls all the time for offers of over $200,000," said Mike Hughes, vice chairman at the Martin Agency, Richmond, Va. "We tell them to go ahead and take it."

Some creative people have actually taken cuts in salary to work at the Martin Agency because of its creative reputation, Mr. Hughes said.

"Some agencies have stars," he said. "But they pay a quarter of a million to a few people and everyone else makes $35,000. We have major people on every account."#

President of Saatchi unit quits

By CLEVELAND HORTON

The third in a series of setbacks has hit Toyota Motor Sales USA's Lexus division as David W. Wager abruptly resigned as president of Saatchi & Saatchi Team One.

Mr. Wager, 41, left the Torrance, Calif., agency Feb. 1, immediately after representing Lexus' shop at the National Automobile Dealers Assn. annual meeting in New Orleans. Mr. Wager said he was taking an unidentified job opportunity.

Stuart B. Upson, chairman and co-ceo of parent Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, will assume the role as president of Team One, the unit formed specifically to handle the estimated $60 million Lexus account.

Mr. Wager's departure "couldn't have come at a worse time," said George Peterson, president of the AutoPacific Group, a research company. Most carmakers are starting to "cross the t's and dot the i's" on creative strategy for the 1990 model year, he said.

Lexus plans to introduce its first two cars next fall.

The loss of Mr. Wager follows several unexpected changes for Lexus.

Late last year, Toyota lost the first round of a legal dispute with Mead Corp. over the name of its new division (AA, Dec. 19 [illegible] seq.). As the lawsuit lingers in appeal, Lexus can't run any national advertising.

Early this year, the division's highly regarded general manager, Jim Perkins, left the company to become assistant general manager of General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet division (AA, Jan. 23).

He was replaced by J. Davis Illingworth, Lexus corporate manager-sales and operations.

Mr. Wager cited change of man-

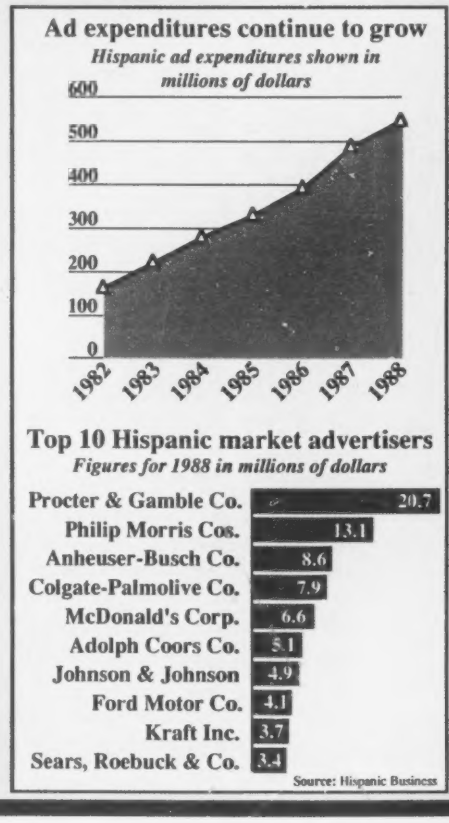
Marketing to Hispanics



Hills Bros. push percolates from bottom to top

By Alice Z. Cuneo

Hills Bros. Coffee entered the Hispanic market in 1988 hoping for instant results. By introducing its Hills Brothers and MJB instant coffees to the Hispanic market, the company demonstrated its commitment to listen to its sales force.

"Communications [at Hills Bros.] don't just go from management down," says Laura Lynn Liptai, Hills Bros. Coffee product manager. The impetus to get into the Hispanic market came from two members of its field staff, she says.

For two years, Kenneth Hogue, Hills Bros. Los Angeles division sales manager, listened to his sales force lament the company's lack of attention to the area's expanding Hispanic market.

> The program was intended to produce quick sales, not hope for long-term results.

> Hills Bros.

" 'We need to do something for the Hispanic community,' 'We're limited with our point-of-sales materials,' is what they told me," Mr. Hogue recalls. Finally, he approached Southwest Regional Sales Manager Gene Gilruth, who analyzed the sales force's request.

The project then went to VP-Marketing Barry Reis, who put everything together—"someone like me who had experience in the market, and those pushing the company to get into the market," Ms. Liptai says. Before coming to Hills Bros., Ms. Liptai handled Hispanic marketing for Procter & Gamble Co.'s Folgers coffee and Citrus Hill orange juice. By conducting focus groups and performing quantitative analysis, the company discovered a market of "particularly significant users of instant, and we weren't catering to it," Mr. Hogue says.

Thirty-two percent of the nation's 19 million Hispanics reside in California, a state that accounts for roughly 20% of instant coffee consumption, Ms. Liptai says. "You've got a big instant coffee market, coupled with a very big Hispanic community," she says.

The company's research revealed that many of the area's Mexican immigrants used instant coffee to make cafe con leche, a mixture of warm milk and instant coffee, and that many Hispanic parents served the mix to their children. "A number of studies show that Hispanics drink 30% more coffee than the Anglo population," adds Ms. Liptai.

According to a 1987 Strategy Research Corp. market study, U.S. Hispanics index 6.9% higher than non-Hispanics for use of instant coffee, and 48.9% higher for total coffee usage, including Latin-style ground coffee.

At the time, Hills Bros.' general-market effort was focused on couponing, Ms. Liptai says. "In the Hispanic market, you don't start with coupons but with another proven medium," she says.

The 1987 SRC study showed that only 38.1% of U.S. Hispanics used cents-off coupons. However, a recent survey by coupon distributor Donnelley Marketing reports that 66% of Hispanic households redeem three or more coupons weekly.

Genesis: Entering the market

To help select the medium and create a test campaign for the two brands, Hills Bros. last March signed La Agencia de Orci & Asociados, Los Angeles, to handle both brands. Funding for the Southern California Hispanic test came from a discretionary trade and consumer promotion fund allotted to each regional office.

Orci and Hills Bros. launched the campaign in August on Los Angeles radio outlets KLVE (AM, FM), KWKW-AM and KTNQ-AM. The test, which consisted of one 30-second Spanish-language spot for each brand, ran until December.

With close to 4 million Hispanics residing in greater Los Angeles, agency president Hector Orci says the decision to test in Los Angeles was "very efficient."

The MJB spot, in which a mother takes an instant-coffee break after sending her children off to school and husband off to work, uses the theme, "When it's time for coffee, savor the moment with a rich delicious cup of MJB." Although not a drastic departure from general-market executions, the ad played upon the idea of mother and family, an effective pitch in the Hispanic market, says Ms. Liptai.

The Hills Bros. instant spot touched on a similar theme, focusing on Hispanic women as gracious hostesses. During a discussion of the just-finished dinner, the hostess says her recipe for coffee was simple: Hills Bros. instant. The guests agree that the coffee was perfect for sobremesa, the time spent talking at the table after the meal is complete.

Ms. Liptai says the test program was unusual because "we turned it around so quickly. We went from concept to execution in about 12 weeks."

The program was intended to produce an immediate sales increase "not just go in and hope for long-term results," she says. Test results show a 15% to 20% increase in sales for both brands based on pre- and post-evaluation studies.

Ms. Liptai adds that Hills Bros.' 1989 campaign "will basically repeat the elements of the 1988 test" and may start as early as next month. A second phase, scheduled for 1990, will involve bringing vacuum or ground coffee into the market, she says. "Instant is the most important coffee type to the Hispanic market so that was the place to start, but we will branch out."

Mr. Orci also says TV is being considered, as are promotions and trade events.

Ms. Liptai says the company may expand into other Southern California markets, with possible rollout into Northern California and other major Hispanic areas nationwide. "What we've got here is a successful test, and now we're looking to expand," she says. □

Hills Bros. has it made in the shade with high Hispanic coffee consumption.

BK unearthing old creative?

MIAMI—Burger King is believed to be reviving TV spots from former agency J. Walter Thompson USA, New York, in the wake of continued dissatisfaction with N W Ayer creative, sources said. The spots will air nationally. New York-based Ayer will propose yet another campaign to Burger King owner Grand Metropolitan this week, the sources said, adding that Ayer's hold on the $200 million fast-food account may slip if the British conglomerate still nixes Ayer's ideas.

Whittle plans Hispanic magazine

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—Whittle Communications is developing a national magazine for Hispanic women. Sources close to the company said the magazine would also involve another form of media, possibly TV. Kraft wins big in food merger

Is ad agency consolidation next?

By JUDANN DAGNOLI
and JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Philip Morris Cos. shifted the power base of its food operations to Kraft by merging General Foods Corp. and Kraft into a single unit called Kraft General Foods Group.

The new group will be headquartered in Glenview, Ill., Kraft's home, and be headed by Kraft Chairman John Richman, who becomes chairman-ceo of the new unit effective March 1.

But Kraft President-CEO Michael Miles, named president-chief operating officer of the new group, will take the ceo post from Mr. Richman in 1990.

The restructuring forms seven operating units: General Foods USA; Kraft USA; Kraft General Foods International; Kraft General Foods Canada; Oscar Mayer; Kraft General Foods Frozen Products; and the U.S. Commercial Group.

Previously, General Foods was structured into three units and Kraft was divided into five.

Philip Morris kills General Foods line to focus on Kraft's Chillery—P. 28

One industry analyst, John Maxwell of Wheat First Securities, said the new structure may free more ad dollars for General Foods and Kraft brands. "They can now cut overhead and spend more on marketing and advertising," he said.

Kraft's dominance in the merged company is reflected in the presence of Messrs. Miles and Richman and other Kraft executives in key positions.

Four of the seven new division presidents are Kraft executives; three are General Foods executives.

Some of Kraft's best managers have been moved into troubled operations and key growth areas.

Miles Marsh, 41, Kraft's operations-technology president, becomes president of General Foods USA, which will now include troubled Maxwell House coffee.

Thomas Herskovitz, who engineered a turnaround as group VP of the Kraft Dairy Group, takes charge of the new frozen foods group, a growth vehicle that

WPP hunts big research buy

By GARY LEVIN
and IRA TEINOWITZ

WPP Group is on the acquisition warpath, aiming to become one of the largest players in the lucrative research industry, sources say.

WPP is eyeing several research companies as part of what these sources say is an aggressive strategy to expand the operations of MRB Group, acquired in the JWT Group takeover of 1987.

"He wants to [own] the second-biggest market research company in the world," one source said, referring to Martin Sorrell, WPP Group's chief executive.

Last week, WPP narrowly lost out on a bid for the Burke research division of SAMI/Burke.

Frank Stanton, president-ceo of MRB, confirmed that WPP had made a bid for Burke but said the deal was scuttled last week over disagreements on who should bear the cost of the planned shutdown of Burke's Test Marketing Group, said to be losing $1 million a month.

The closing of that unit is expected to result in 250 to 300 layoffs at a projected cost of several million dollars, and, Mr. Stanton said, "We [didn't] want to go in, immediately restructure and lay off several hundred people.

"The test market group is a disaster; it has to be closed down," he said. "But, especially in our acquiring mode, we would prefer a cleaner acquisition. We didn't get where we are by restructuring and firings."

WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell stands next to his desk in his London office.

WPP officials said talks ended after a meeting on Feb. 13, but Burke sources said WPP's bid remained on the bargaining table until week's end, when SAMI/Burke parent Control Data Corp. agreed to sell the Burke unit to a management group.

The management group has a specified amount of time to raise enough money for the buyout or it won't go through.

Also, a source said executives at a crucial part of the company, Burke Marketing Research, have signed a letter of intent giving the option for a separate buyout of that group at a later date if they can raise the cash. Burke officials declined comment.

It's unclear what Burke's new owners would do with Test Marketing Group's AdTel service.

Analysts projected Burke's price tag at $70 million, equal to its estimated 1988 revenues; terms weren't disclosed.

Other WPP executives confirmed interest in Burke "cooled" as a result of disagreements.

Control Data put Burke on the auction block after acquiring Time Inc.'s interest in SAMI/Burke and folding SAMI into its Arbitron Ratings Co. unit.

WPP's Mr. Sorrell declined to be interviewed, but he's made no secret of his desire to beef up the company's strength in the research business as well as other areas, such as public relations.

Reebok responds to Nike

'Power marketing' plan backed by $60M

By PAT SLOAN

Reebok International will boost the ad budget for Reebok brands by 50% this year, to $60 million, as it fights off rival Nike.

In the $4.3 billion athletic-shoe industry's version of the cola and burger wars, Reebok is unleashing a new "power marketing strategy" built around three ad campaigns.

"What we're doing is something only the biggest companies can do. It's a pre-emptive program of advertising and merchandising that, other than Nike, no one else in the category has the resources to do," said Mark Goldston, Reebok's senior VP-chief marketing officer.

Nike last year spent an estimated $70 million on advertising and watched its sales jump by almost 60% to $1.5 billion. Reebok's sales also increased, but by less than 20% to $1.79 billion, so that in the fight for market dominance, Nike edged a bit closer to No. 1 Reebok.

Mr. Goldston, however, doesn't attribute 1989's ad increase to a race with Nike but rather to Reebok's conclusion that "we think we need to spend $60 million to effectively communicate three different messages on TV." Eighty percent of the budget will go to network and cable TV, and the rest to print, radio and outdoor boards.

Like its sister division Avia Athletic Footwear and competitor Nike, Reebok is now taking a serious tone in three campaigns combining performance and image messages.

The three-tiered strategy segments Reebok's consumer audience, Mr. Goldston said. As a "billion-dollar company, you can't have just one campaign to reach everyone from housewives to inner-city youths to a 50-year-old post-heart attack victim," he explained. The new ad program has no ties to last year's "U.B.U." effort that's been laid to rest (AA, Feb. 6).

Of the $60 million budget, $25 million will go to Reebok's Energy Return System shoes. Introduced last year, the shoes are now engineered with windows on the soles showing color-coded iridescent tubes that are supposed to return energy to the wearer.

The Energy Return System commercial, from Chiat/Day, New York, is subdued, not sexy, and visually evocative of cuts from ABC's "Wide World of Sports."

The commercial, scheduled to air this summer, compares the Energy Return System with sports technology breakthroughs and ends with the line "Who knows what records will fall next?"

On March 27, Reebok will break the $20 million "The physics behind the physiques" TV campaign, also from Chiat/Day (AA, Feb. 6). The campaign has two versions: one for women and one for men.

Consisting of 15- and 30-second spots, plus a :60 for women, the commercials were shot by Tony Scott, director of "Top Gun."

The women's version shows quick cuts of women working out, panting through sit-ups and on treadmills as a voice-over says, "For every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction. . . . A body at rest tends to stay at rest."

But the quick-cut spots also show them decked out in body-hugging and baring fashions, a miniskirted

Upscale meals face a big chill

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON and JUDANN DAGNOLI

The $500 million high-price frozen-dinner market is groping for survival.

The continued success of Kraft's lower-price Budget Gourmet is slowly squeezing the life from this once-popular category. Marketers have resorted to slashing ad budgets and cutting prices.

Although premium-price dinners represent about half of dollar sales of frozen dinners, the category experienced a 2.1% drop in 1988 and is losing shelf space rapidly, according to SAMI/Burke.

Sales reached $500 million last year, after hitting the $1 billion high mark in 1984.

The sales decline is a dramatic setback for marketers such as Campbell Soup Co., ConAgra and Stouffer Foods Corp. They'd banked on consumers paying extra for top-quality microwaveable meals.

Campbell, for example, introduced Le Menu with great fanfare in 1982. The upscale and pricey Le Menu was so successful that it was said to have served as the stepping-stone for Herb Baum's ascent to the presidency of Campbell USA.

But as consumers became more price-conscious, the popularity of Le Menu, marketed at about $3.89 in the mid-1980s, began to wane under stiff price competition from Budget Gourmet, priced around $2.39.

Campbell began lowering Le Menu's price to near the $2.89 mark and diverting its money from media advertising to price promotion and couponing.

An in-house report from Campbell said Budget Gourmet's sales have surpassed the $400 million

Lintas:Worldwide snares Day to fill int'l creative role

NEW YORK—Barry Day, who worked for McCann-Erickson Worldwide for 18 years, is moving to Lintas:Worldwide, a sister Interpublic Group of Cos. agency.

At Lintas, he will be vice chairman-director of international advertising development, effective April 1. He will be responsible for the agency's creative product and for helping to deliver Lintas' "integrated" communications approach for clients.

Mr. Day, 54, began his career with Lintas in 1956. In 1970, he moved to McCann, where the flamboyant creative executive spearheaded the agency's drive to create global advertising images for its multinational clients.

He left his post as vice chairman at McCann last November to become assistant to Interpublic Chairman-CEO Philip H. Geier Jr. and worked on assessing the implications of the breakdown of European trade barriers in 1992.

B. Day

"When Barry Day left McCann-Erickson to join Phil Geier at Interpublic, we began to explore the possibility of acquiring his talents for Lintas," said William Weithas, chairman-ceo.#

'Modern Maturity'—no signs of gray

By IRA TEINOWITZ

The aging of America is proving to be a bonanza for Modern Maturity.

The six-times-a-year publication, provided as part of the American Association of Retired Persons' $5 annual membership, saw its circulation jump 15.4% to 19,301,820 for the second half of 1988 compared with a year ago, the Audit Bureau of Circulations reported.

Just six months ago, Modern Maturity passed Reader's Digest and TV Guide to become the biggest paid-circulation magazine in the U.S. (AA, Aug. 22).

The Audit Bureau's latest FAS-FAX report found that Modern Maturity on average now has a nearly 3 million-copy circulation advantage over its nearest rival.

Modern Maturity increased its rate base 11.5% to 19.4 million with the February/March issue. Ad rates rose 7.5% to $154,330 for a b&w page and $171,000 for color.

Peter Hanson, advertising director, said Modern Maturity this year began offering advertisers a national mix of a fourth or half its circulation.

"It has never been done before, but then no magazine has been this big," he said.

Mr. Hanson also said the magazine may continue to grow. He noted that there are 30 million AARP members. (Only one copy of Modern Maturity is sent to each household.)

"There are 62 million people over the age of 50," he said.

While Modern Maturity grew, other magazines reported mixed circulation results. The FAS-FAX numbers are publishers' reports of their circulation before Audit Bureau auditing.

Reader's Digest blamed a subscription drop of 1% for an overall circulation decline of 0.7%, to 16,452,422.

TV Guide, purchased last year by Rupert Murdoch, reported its circulation dropped 3.9% to 16,302,705, virtually all of the decrease due to newsstand sales.

Better Homes & Gardens reported a 1.6% increase in circulation, Family Circle's circulation rose 2.6% and Good Housekeeping increased 0.4%.

The other Seven Sisters magazines—Woman's Day, Ladies' Home Journal, Redbook and McCall's—all reported decreases.

Peter Diamandis, president and ceo of Diamandis Communications Inc., publisher of Woman's Day, cautioned about drawing too many conclusions from the circulation numbers.

He said DCI has been moving to refine circulation through cover-price boosts and other steps designed to offer advertisers a more committed audience.

"The trade press is under the impression that bigger is better," Mr. Diamandis said. "But target marketing suggests advertisers are interested in getting a more salient audience. Smart publishers are taking their circulation down in a managed way. They try to give you the hard-core readers."

Mr. Diamandis said his company's "contained circulation" policy was responsible for Woman's Day's price increase to $1.09 from 99¢ and its circulation drop to 5,571,573, down 7.5% from a year ago.

He said Woman's Day and most other company publications are now at the circulation level they should be, and no further cuts are necessary.

The only exception is Elle, which will see a rise in circulation this year, Mr. Diamandis said.

The FAS-FAX report traditionally ignores Sunday magazines such as Parade, distributed free with newspapers.#

A brighter 'New Yorker'

Color cartoons, upfront section 'evolve'

By LENORE SKENAZY

What's that? The president's been shot? The U.S. attacked? The world ending?

No, no—this is important! We're talking color cartoons in The New Yorker. Yes, The New Yorker!

Readers perusing the 64th annual Eustace Tilley edition of Feb. 20 had better sit down first. In addition to four pages of color yuks, the venerable institution has revamped its upfront "Goings On About Town" section and enlarged some of its illustrations.

"We don't use the word 'change' around here; we use the word 'evolution,' " said President-CEO Steve Florio.

Quickie essays on the arts now precede most of the listings categories, interspersed with paragraph-long tidbits on New York in all its quirky glory. Instead of roll-top desks and kittens lapping milk, moreover, the "Goings On" drawings actually illustrate the featured people and events. A first! This week, mugs of Andy Warhol, Tom Hanks and Michelle Pfeiffer appear.

"The New Yorker grew up on caricatures and illustration, but somehow, over the years, they disappeared," said Editor Robert Gottlieb.

"It's just a natural extension," said Conde Nast Associate Editorial Director Rochelle Udell, who worked with Mr. Gottlieb and others on the revamp.

Mr. Gottlieb came to The New Yorker three years ago, after its purchase by S.I. Newhouse's Advance Publications in 1985.

"For a while when he first got here the staff was scrutinizing his every move, and he was more or less trying to do what [William] Shawn had been doing all those years," Mr. Florio said. Now Mr. Gottlieb seems determined to assert his own voice even while recapturing a bit of the old Harold Ross spirit.

"Harold Ross was an irreverent, funny guy," Mr. Florio said. "He ran the magazine in the '20s, '30s and '40s. Then we had Shawn for the '50s, '60s, '70s and most of the '80s. I asked Shawn, 'How come we aren't very funny any more?' and he said, 'Because these aren't very funny times.' "

Under Mr. Shawn, the magazine ran groundbreaking stories on pollution, politics and the atom bomb.

"Now we've got a guy who's probably more like Ross," Mr. Florio said. "Bob Gottlieb happens to be a very jokey guy. Brilliant, but very funny."

Perhaps as tribute to the Ross era, this Tilley anniversary issue includes a nine-page John Updike article on Ralph Barton, a New Yorker cartoonist of the '20s and '30s.

Although it's too soon to gauge advertiser reaction, Mr. Florio said 1989 will herald "the renaissance of The New Yorker." Ad pages fell 15.2% to 2,293 in 1988 but will be up this year, he said. Circulation is up about 3% to 613,275.

And wait'll folks get a load of those color cartoons!

Whoa. Don't get so excited. These will appear only sporadically. "I have no plans for colorizing The New Yorker," Mr. Gottlieb said. Still . . .#

Top-selling beers are heavy with lights . . .

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Anheuser-Busch's Bud Light moved up one notch in 1988 to become the third-best-selling beer in the U.S., and for the first time three of the top five brands in the country are light beers.

The yearend tally of industry newsletter Beer Marketer's Insights showed A-B held three of the top five spots in beer shipments. Budweiser remained No. 1, and Busch stayed in fifth place. A-B's Michelob was No. 10.

Miller Brewing Co.'s Miller High Life fell to sixth from third. Miller Lite repeated as No. 2, though it showed little growth. Miller's Milwaukee's Best was ninth; in 1987, it was 10th.

In other changes in the top 10, Adolph Coors Co.'s Coors Light passed A-B's Busch to become No. 4 (up from No. 6 in 1987). Stroh Brewery Co.'s Old Milwaukee moved up from No. 8 to pass regular Coors, which was No. 7 last year.

The newsletter also reported that Bud Light sales showed the biggest percentage increase in the top 10, up 18% to 9.7 million barrels. But Miller Genuine Draft, which ranked No. 11, showed the biggest percentage gain of any national brand, a 50% increase to 4 million barrels.

A-B sold 50.45 million barrels of Budweiser—a 2% increase and more than double the 19.3 million for second-place Miller Lite.

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, St. Louis, handles Budweiser and Busch; DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, is the agency for Bud Light and Michelob.

Miller Lite and Miller Genuine Draft are handled by Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York; Miller High Life recently was assigned to Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, from Backer. Milwaukee's Best was unadvertised last year.

Coors uses GSD&M, Austin, Texas, for Coors, and Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, for Coors Light. Stroh's Old Milwaukee is handled by Grey Advertising, New York.#

Miller Brewing's Miller High Life tumbled to sixth from third place in 1988. As a result of the realignment, three of the top five beers now are light beers. Estimated shipments below are in millions of barrels.

. . . Corona may join in

By IRA TEINOWITZ

The two importers of Corona Extra are betting a new line extension will turn around the beer's declining sales.

Although the importers won't say what the line extension will be, they're expected to introduce Corona Light this spring, industry sources said (AA, Jan. 30).

The importers are in a defensive mood following last year's decline in sales on the heels of Corona's great success in 1987.

"Everybody is quick to claim the brand is going south for good," said Michael J. Mazzoni, exec VP-general manager at Barton Beers, which imports the Mexican beer into Western and some Midwestern markets. Gambrinus Importing Co. markets Corona in other areas of the U.S.

Barton and Gambrinus last year introduced Corona's first network TV advertising, via Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Chicago.

The importers will continue the "What you see is what you get" campaign this year, though with some additional executions. The new product won't get a separate campaign.

Impact, a liquor industry newsletter, estimated 1988 Corona sales at 22 million cases, down 4.3% from 1987. Heineken, the import leader, sold an estimated 34.3 million cases, up 14.8%. Van Munching & Co. imports Heineken.

Corona was distributed primarily in the Midwest and West until last year, when distribution expanded nationwide.

Mr. Mazzoni said the No. 2 imported beer's sales last year dropped as much as 15% in the Western half of the U.S. but were up in Indiana, Illinois and Washington state.

Earlier production problems were a factor in the drop, Mr. Mazzoni said. The problems restricted U.S. Corona shipments in 1986, so bars and stores purposely overordered, he said.

The bars and stores again overordered in 1987, only to find production capacity had been increased and shipments weren't being cut.

Mr. Mazzoni also blamed lower sales on domestic brewers' decision to target import buyers.#

Casinos chance targeted ads

By LAURA LORO

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J.—Casinos here are anteing up more advertising dollars to meet intensified competition and a shrinking pool of gamblers.

They're also getting more sophisticated, segmenting advertising to target high rollers, older adults, families and younger players.

Still, advertising alone won't do it: Most executives agree growth will depend on better transportation into the city.

"Expansion and improvement of the airport is critical to the success of the industry," said Patrick Killian, director of casino industry economics, Casino Association of New Jersey.

Executives are optimistic about planned improvements for the Atlantic City International Airport and the "Gambler's Express," a shuttle train to Philadelphia set to begin service by June.

The hottest development is real estate mogul Donald Trump's purchase of Eastern Airlines' shuttle that operates between Washington, New York and Boston. Some say Mr. Trump may divert flights to Atlantic City on weekends and holidays, although Trump Organization executives say nothing has been decided. Trump's Taj Mahal casino is scheduled to open in early 1990.

Better transportation could break the market wide open, said Bruce Smith, publisher, Gaming & Wagering Business. But for now, casinos are fighting for the 50 million-plus daytrip gamblers who drive in from Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Washington.

In 1988, the 12 casinos here grossed $2.7 billion, a 9.6% increase over 1987, according to the New Jersey Casino Control Commission. In 1986, 11 casinos grossed $2.2 billion, the commission reports.

Harrah's, Caesars and Trump Plaza are the most profitable, said William Cradle, director of communications, Casino Association of New Jersey.

But ad restrictions handicap casinos. The New Jersey Casino Control Commission prohibits all advertising from giving a casino's size, the number of its games or gambling odds. On-site advertising must carry the disclaimer: "Bet with your head, not over it."

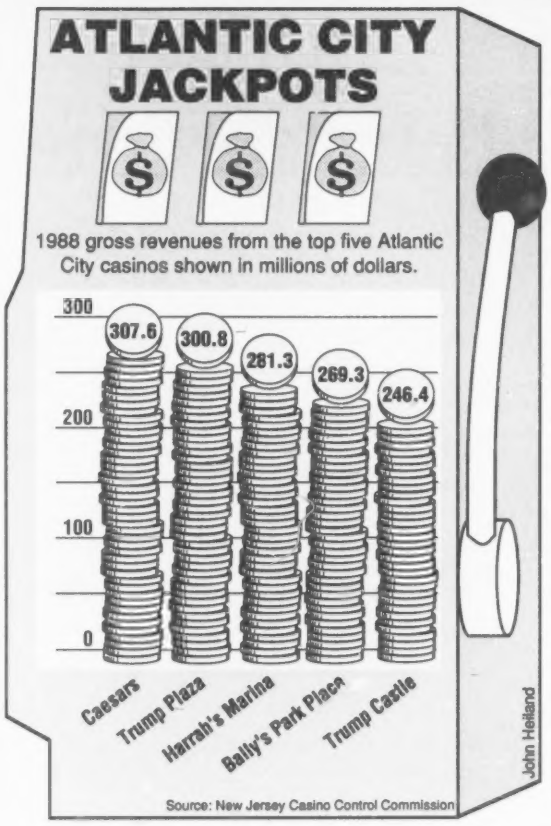
Under Federal Communications Commission restrictions on broadcast advertising, the word "casino" may be used only as part of an establishment's official name, and showing identifiable gaming halls is prohibited, said Ben Halprin, FCC attorney.

The FCC prohibits cable TV system operators from airing spots that promote casino activities, and would pursue system operators, not casinos, in the event of a violation, Mr. Halprin said.

"What it amounts to is we can't advertise our product," said Alan Rosenzweig, Bally's Park Place director of advertising and public relations.

Advertising has become increasingly more targeted, with direct marketing playing a large role, said Gary Selesner, Trump Plaza director of marketing. But that also is restricted.

"It is in violation of federal law to communicate information about gambling across state lines," said Robert Pickus, VP-general counsel, Trump Castle. Out-of-state mailings focus on restaurant, hotel or entertainment promotions and not casino activity, although in-state mailings do tout them, he said.



Direct mail "is as important as mass media," Mr. Selesner said. Trump Plaza uses different mailings to reach high rollers, daytrippers and slot machine players. Trump Plaza recently moved its estimated $7 million account to VanSant Dugdale, Baltimore, from Smith Burke & Azzam, Baltimore, when three of the agency's five partners moved to VanSant Dugdale (AA, Feb. 6, et seq.).

"Direct mail is outdoing mass media due to escalating costs," said Alyssa Ruby-Mako, TropWorld director of marketing services.

Bally's Park Place mailed invitations to a closed-circuit viewing of a November prizefight between Sugar Ray Leonard and Donny Lalonde; more than 3,000 attended, Mr. Rosenzweig said.

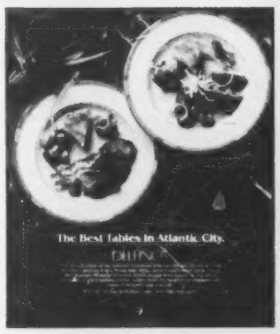
The casino handles advertising, themed "Bally's is slots!" in-house. Bally's print and outdoor advertising emphasize its slot machines; its parent, Bally Manufacturing Corp., Chicago, makes slot machines.

Casinos also maintain intensely competitive bus programs, offering passengers complimentary packages including gambling chips, restaurant coupons and show tickets.

While Las Vegas casinos have been very successful in attracting younger players and families, it hasn't worked as well here. The Showboat opened in March 1987, targeting families with advertising touting amenities including a bowling center, but hasn't met with great success, industry sources say. Showboat now targets premium players, Mr. Smith said. Kelly & Reber handles advertising, themed "Get that winning feeling."

Resorts International is expected to boost its ad spending significantly under new owner Merv Griffin. Its ad plans are up in the air since the ownership change; the casino may review agencies, said George Meredith, VP, Gianettino & Meredith, Short Hills, N.J., agency on the $3 million account. Mr. Griffin will appear in all upcoming advertising.

Current advertising targets "the middle market, drive-in player, the everyday Joe," Mr. Meredith said.



Restricted from showing their casinos, Trump Castle (top) touts restaurants, and Harrah's uses testimonials.

Harrah's Marina targets upscale players with TV spots themed "This one's for the better people. This one's for you." Trahan, Burden & Charles, Baltimore, handles.

The upscale Trump Plaza touts itself as "The happening place" with invitations to special events mailed to households in the U.S. as well as in Europe, the Orient and South America.

Trump Castle will reach high-end players when hotel suites open in the spring. Smith Burke & Azzam handles that $7 million account, but Trump Castle reportedly is looking to bring advertising in-house.

Trump's Taj Mahal recently named Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson, New York, to handle advertising, expected to begin in the fall. Billings may reach $12 million.

TropWorld, formerly Tropicana, positions itself as "The gambling world of Atlantic City" for younger players, touting Tivoli Pier, an amusement center. Barnes, Dennis & Associates, Greensboro, N.C., handles the estimated $5 million-to-$10 million account.#

DiMaggio softens up bank pitch

NEW YORK—Bowery Savings Bank has launched an $8 million campaign, its largest ad effort.

Four TV spots that broke Feb. 16 feature baseball great Joe DiMaggio, Bowery's spokesman of 18 years. The nostalgic spots show Mr. DiMaggio recounting stories from his days on the field and historical footage from actual games.

"You've never seen Joe like this. These show him at a very human, intimate level," said Director Bob Giraldi.

The campaign, Bowery's first TV effort in more than five years, is supported by product-oriented newspaper, outdoor and transit ads. Chiat/Day handles.

Newspaper ads introduce Bowery's relationship with Home Savings of America, one of the largest savings institutions in the U.S. Home Savings parent H.F. Ahmanson & Co. purchased Bowery for $200 million, gaining an entry into the New York market, in early 1988.

Bowery has 25 branches here.#

Food giants pull back on marketing, but boost promotion

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON and JUDANN DAGNOLI

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.—Food marketers are putting the brakes on big marketing budget increases as they focus more attention on the bottom line.

At the same time, these marketers increasingly are favoring consumer and trade promotion at the expense of media advertising.

"Marketing and advertising budgets are coming down across the board—and that's for good," said Eric Larson, analyst with First Boston Corp. "With increasing commodity costs and changes in trade relationships, companies need to watch the bottom line."

Wrestling with such issues as drought-related hikes in commodity costs, continuing takeover fears, unrelenting price promotion and more demands from retailers, marketers attending the Consumer Analysts Group of New York's annual meeting here predicted sharply lower increases in marketing budgets.

For example:

- Quaker Oats Co. said it will halve its budget increase to an estimated 10% to 12% from its traditional 20% to 25%. "Our marketing increases will be more in line with sales increases than in the recent past," Chairman-CEO William Smithburg said.
- Michael Miles, president-chief operating officer of the newly merged Kraft General Foods Group, projected "substantial" marketing increases but probably at about half the 1988 rate, when Kraft spending was up 18%.
- Anheuser-Busch will try to make up some of its $100 million in drought-related costs by "re-evaluating its marketing expenditures this year," said Jerry Ritter, exec VP-group executive. Because A-B won't incur any Olympic-related expenses, the company's marketing expenditures will decline. But Mr. Ritter said ongoing beer advertising won't be cut.
- Kellogg Co. plans to reduce marketing expenses by "re-evaluating the way we remunerate our agencies, the way we buy media and how many new products we introduce," said Horst Schroeder, president-chief operating officer.

Industry ad spending will "go up more in line with sales," said John Maxwell, an analyst at Wheat First Securities. In the past, marketers had raised ad budgets 20% or more when sales had gone up only 15%, he said.

Whatever the increase, the bulk isn't expected to go into advertising. Instead, food marketers will shift those increases into price promotions, couponing and trade allowances.

"There's a great transfer of dollars into promotion at the expense of advertising," said Ralston Purina Co. Chairman William Stiritz.

Mr. Stiritz said he's worried about "how the emergence of a format like Wal-Mart or hypermarkets as the retail prototype of the future will affect the package-goods companies." His concern is the large chains' ability to demand lower prices and more promotional discounts.

Other companies that are high on promotion include Hershey Foods Corp., which told analysts that while its ad spending remained flat in 1988, at $97 million, its promotional spending soared 40% to $245 million.

Borden said its promotional spending will leap 20% in 1989, compared with a 4% jump in ad spending.

And Campbell Soup Co. said promotional activity will increase this year for frozen-food products and Prego spaghetti sauces, where Campbell is locked in a war with Chesebrough-Pond's Ragu.

It's possible the food marketing mix could eventually reach 70% promotion and 30% advertising, said Bonnie Rivers, a Salomon Bros. analyst.

"Dry grocery is growing at only 1% on a year-to-year basis. Every one of us food companies is aiming for 5% growth. That means

Conn. lawmaker backs ad tax

HARTFORD, CONN.—An influential state senator Friday introduced an ad-tax bill that appears virtually identical to a measure passed and then repealed in Florida two years ago. The bill introduced by Sen. William DiBella (D., Hartford) would extend the state's 7.5% sales tax to in-state and national advertising. Sen. DiBella, who co-chairs the Taxation, Finance & Bonding Committee that has jurisdiction over his bill, estimates the measure would bring in at least $100 million a year. Ad groups that had expected the bill's introduction hope their clout in Connecticut—home to at least 100 companies belonging to the Association of National Advertisers—will prevail and the measure will be defeated.

RJR ready to sell two units

ATLANTA—RJR Nabisco's first asset sales since its acquisition by Kohlberg Kravis Roberts were said to be "imminent" at press time. The spinoffs of Del Monte and Chun King foods are likely to happen first, with Castle & Cooke and an unidentified Japanese company, respectively, mentioned as the likeliest acquirers. McCann-Erickson Worldwide, San Francisco, is Del Monte's main agency; Lowe Marschalk, New York, is Chun King's main agency. The Planters LifeSavers division is believed to be next to go on the auction block. Separately, executives are close to naming a new RJR ceo, sources said. Analysts' speculation centered on James Morgan, staff senior VP-marketing and planning for

Hot magazine exits Murdoch unit, hurt by 'TV Guide' push

By PATRICK REILLY

One of the country's fastest-growing magazines has defected from Rupert Murdoch's U.S. distribution company because it fears losing newsstand and checkout-counter clout to Mr. Murdoch's TV Guide.

Soap Opera Digest last week dropped Murdoch Magazines Distribution Division for Time Distribution Services, the national magazine distributor jointly owned by Time Inc. and New York Times Co. Magazine Group.

Gerry Ritterman, president of Soap Opera Digest parent Network Publishing Corp., cited indications that TV Guide had become top priority at Murdoch Magazines.

His prime concern was getting prominent display space for Soap Opera Digest at a time of heightened promotion of similarly sized TV Guide.

"I need a distributor who will defend us as well as expand us,-and I mean defend us from TV Guide," Mr. Ritterman said. "I feel safe with TDS. They don't have any digest-size magazines. And we are looking at going weekly, and TDS, with magazines like Time and People, understands weekly."

Mr. Ritterman added, "Before Murdoch, Triangle handled all the premier digest-size magazines—TV Guide, Soap Opera Digest and Reader's Digest—and everybody got an even shake. Now they want as much circulation for TV Guide as possible. If my boss had paid $3 billion for something, I would pay attention to it first, too."

Soap Opera Digest's single-copy sales have grown from about 400,000 four years ago to the current level of 857,357 every two weeks. It now has an average total circulation of more than 1.1 million.

Joe Elm, Murdoch's VP for single-copy sales, said Soap Opera Digest left because Sears breaks biggest blitz

By KATE FITZGERALD

Sears, Roebuck & Co. breaks the biggest ad campaign in its history today, and it will follow that media blitz with a significant boost in consumer contests and promotions.

The nation's largest retailer makes its long-anticipated switch this week to "everyday low pricing," with plans to be a more visible promotional marketer. Programs include a national sweepstakes tied to the numbers on Sears' 45 million charge cards.

Sears closes its 824 stores tomorrow and reopens March 1 with an intensive three-week ad campaign using TV, print and radio to announce its new merchandising strategy (AA, Feb. 20).

A pool of eight 30-second commercials will air a total of 700 times during the next three weeks on broadcast and cable TV networks and syndicated programming, Sears said.

Sears will air its TV spots 700 times to support its move to everyday low pricing.

During this first week, Sears commercials will air every half-hour during network prime-time programming.

Sears says this will result in "roadblocks" on the Big 3 networks twice tonight (at 9 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. ET) and four times on Feb. 28 (8 p.m., 8:30 p.m., 9 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. ET).

Sears also has bought between 100 and 150 network radio slots a day during the three-week launch.

Print ads touting the lower pricing on some 50,000 Sears items start today in 900 newspapers.

Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago, is Sears' agency.

After the big launch, Sears' new marketing game plan calls for a significant level of promotional marketing activity later in the year, said Thomas E. Morris, VP-advertising, and dramatic shifts in its newspaper advertising program.

"Instead of weekly inserts focusing on price-off ads, we'll be theming more preprints around promotions and events that will bring flash and excitement to our stores and our advertising," he said.

One of those promotions is believed to be a nationwide, newspaper-advertised sweepstakes using customers' Sears charge card ac-

Ayer makes new regional moves for BK

By GARY LEVIN and SCOTT HUME

N W Ayer is moving ahead with plans to restructure and regionalize its Burger King Corp. account despite questions raised by last week's reappearance of creative work from previous agency J. Walter Thompson USA.

This week, Ayer will announce "working arrangements" with sales promotion agencies for regions surrounding New York and Atlanta, an Ayer executive said. The move is part of the agency's continuing effort to restructure the account.

Burger King's national sales promotion agency, Einson-Freeman, Paramus, N.J., won't be involved with the local promotional efforts—also part of the chain's regional restructuring—but will continue to handle national promotions.

Jeff McElnea, president of the WPP Group-owned Einson, said the actions don't "mean our work for Burger King on the national level will be undercut at all."

The nature of Ayer's "working arrangements" couldn't be determined, but the agency said it has similar plans for the two remaining regions surrounding Los Angeles and Chicago.

"We're not buying any companies," said the Ayer official, who asked not to be identified.

The regional restructuring previously reported means that essentially autonomous "agencies-within-an-agency" in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Atlanta will report to regional Burger King marketing directors. The national account group is still supervised by Ayer Exec VP-Managing Director of Account Services Dominick Rossi in New York.

The Los Angeles and Chicago units already existed; a regional Burger King account group was created in New York (separate from the national group), and a smaller one is being "beefed up" in Ayer's Atlanta office.

Ayer Chairman Louis Hagopian confirmed that two TV spots that broke last week for a Big Cheese double cheeseburger promotion use footage created in 1984 by JWT, New York, for a promotion of a product then called Cheeseburger Deluxe (AA, Feb. 20).

A JWT official said footage from that agency is also being used in other Burger King ads but said the practice isn't unusual since Burger King owns the rights to all its advertising.

Mr. Hagopian denied that a major campaign was being presented to Burger King management or its franchisees this week. Sources said franchisees will be meeting this week in Miami with top Burger King executives and executives from owner Grand Metropolitan.

LOUIS HAGOPIAN

Mr. Hagopian said a spring campaign was presented and approved three to four weeks ago and production of new TV spots will start soon.

Burger King marketing executives couldn't be reached for confirmation.

Also, Mr. Hagopian said Burger King "never was $200 million," despite press reports and the tacit confirmation of that figure by Burger King and Ayer when it won the account. Burger King spent $150 million last year, Mr. Hagopian said, including advertising for all local promotional activity.

In 1987, the year Ayer took over the account from JWT, spending on network and local TV alone was $163 million. In 1986, it was $166 million.

Several Burger King franchisees said they don't expect major changes in marketing until Grand Met finishes hand-picking its top management team for Burger King.#

Olds effort pays off in ad-recall survey

By SCOTT HUME

General Motors Corp.'s Oldsmobile Division finally got a return on its advertising investment last month when its ads placed seventh among the top 10 best-recalled advertisers in ADVERTISING AGE's monthly adWatch survey.

Before its new ad campaign, sales for the once-proud Oldsmobile nameplate were down nearly 30% from two years earlier.

To halt that slide, Oldsmobile and Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, created a new campaign intended to reposition the line in consumers' minds, especially young consumers for whom the Olds name often connoted stodginess more than excitement.

Boldly announcing a "New generation of Olds," the new campaign began Sept. 15 during NBC-TV's Summer Olympics coverage. The commercials feature such celebrities as actors William Shatner and Priscilla Presley, singer Frankie Avalon, game show host Monty Hall, former astronaut Scott Carpenter, auto racer Gary Bettenhausen and musician Dave Brubeck, along with each one's son or daughter (AA, Sept. 12).

"This is not your father's Oldsmobile," the ads insist.

To ensure that people saw and remembered the commercials, Oldsmobile increased its ad budget by 20% to about $120 million.

The company undoubtedly will be cheered to learn that consumer recall for its advertising was strongest among respondents ages 35 to 44, presumably the target audience for the new pitch.

Oldsmobile's newfound recall strength continued when respondents were asked to name the first car or truck advertising that came to their minds. Olds placed fourth in January, with 3.8% of first mentions, compared with fifth and 3.2% in December.

Ford maintained its hold on the top spot with a 22.6% share of first mentions; GM's Chevrolet was second with 21.9%; Toyota was third with 9.6%.

Missing from the top 10 overall were any of the other new campaigns unveiled during the Summer Olympics broadcast. The Beef Industry Council, for example, also invested in celebrity faces for its $30 million "Real food for real people" campaign but didn't make the top 10.

Neither did Xerox Corp., GTE Corp. or Eastman Kodak Co. All three broke new creative during the Games that seems not to have outlasted the Olympics in viewers' memories.

One other advertiser that made an impact in January was Anheuser-Busch. Its Budweiser/Bud Light team is in the top 10 in almost every monthly survey. But in January, advertising for Budweiser and Bud Light was the best recalled for the first time since the December 1987 survey.

The January adWatch survey was conducted by the Gallup Organization before the Jan. 26 Super Bowl telecast during which A-B's "Bud Bowl I" commercial series appeared.

Other studies suggested that the commercials, showing a mock football game between bottles of Bud and Bud Light, were among the best-recalled from the Super Bowl.

Following Bud and Bud Light, others in January's top 10 were, in descending order, Coca-Cola, Chevrolet, McDonald's Corp., Ford, Pepsi-Cola, Oldsmobile, Miller Brewing Co., the California Raisin Advisory Board and Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide.

AdWatch is a joint project of AD AGE and the Gallup Organization. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the first advertising that comes to mind from all seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days. Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by phone. The margin of error is 3.1%.

Among other changes last month:

- What happened to Apple Computer? Its share of first mentions had been building for the past three months (up 4.8 points in October, up another 4.4 in November and then up 3.5 in December).

But last month, when respondents were asked which computer advertising they recalled first, Apple was named by 34.6%, down 7.4 points from its 42% share in December.

IBM Corp. remained in the No. 2 spot and posted a modest 2.9-point gain with a 24.8% share of first mentions. Radio Shack was third with 2.5%.

- The fight for the top spot in the soft-drink category continues. In January, Coca-Cola won the recall race, garnering 36.7% of first mentions, compared with Pepsi's 36.1%. In December, Pepsi had been in front by a similarly slim margin, 36.6% to 35.9%.

Diet Coke, which Coca-Cola Co. has been heavily promoting, took the No. 3 spot with a 6.8% share of mentions, its strongest showing ever.

- McDonald's continues to redefine the meaning of strong showing. Last month, it topped the adWatch record of 52.5% (which it set in December) by getting 53.2% of first mentions in the fast-food category.

Burger King Corp. was a distant second with 12.4%, followed by Wendy's International with 5.4%.#

Coke gives screen test to new cinema ad idea

By CHRISTY FISHER

Coca-Cola Co. will test consumer reaction to four types of theater advertising, including a new concept that pairs an ad message with a music video.

The soft-drink giant plans to conduct the test for a weekend starting March 10 in United Artist and American Multi-Cinema theaters in Dallas, New York and southern California, said Peter Caparis, Coca-Cola director of theater and prestige advertising.

The purpose of the 12-theater test is to determine which type of advertising is most effective in reaching people ages 12 to 30.

Before the movie, each theater will show the same made-for-cinema Sprite commercial, either on-screen; on-screen with a slide; on a TV monitor in the lobby; or paired with a music video.

Coca-Cola is working on the music video with Dallas-based Avatar's Music Cinema Network. Lowe Marschalk, New York, created the 60-second spot.

When the spot is paired with a music video, an opening on-screen board will give information about the song and artist, said Skip Honeycutt, Avatar president. The presentation closes with the sponsor's logo.

The test probably will use a music video of Boy Meets Girl singing "Bring Down the Moon."

"When you look what happened to network TV and the erosion and fragmentation of the audience, cinema advertising is a great way to supplement that buy," Mr. Caparis said. "But we're not sure how consumers feel about it, and that's why we're doing the test. We've seen mixed consumer reaction."#

Upjohn takes a shine to balding women

As Rogaine's potential with male market thins, marketer eyes new target for hair-growth drug

By Laurie Freeman

Bald women. Top-flight models and actresses have shaved their heads to play roles, gain attention, assume an exotic look.

For millions of American women, however, baldness is neither glamorous nor something they are paid to do. It is unsightly, unacceptable and totally unwanted. It is also a condition Upjohn Co. is betting they will pay handsomely to reverse.

The men's market for hair-growth products has thinned, analysts say. Now, Upjohn is setting its sights on the potentially lucrative women's market for its anti-baldness drug, Rogaine Topical Solution.

The size of the women's market is open to question. Analysts estimate that 20 million of the approximately 55 million balding U.S. adults age 20 to 45 are women. This represents 15.5% of U.S. women.

However, a recent Gallup Organization survey commissioned by ADVERTISING AGE puts the total number of balding women at 7.2 million or 5.6% of U.S. women.

"Thinning hair in women is a much more sensitive subject," says Neil Sweig, drug and healthcare analyst at Prudential-Bache. "Hair is a major part of a woman's total look."

To cash in on women's hair-loss concerns, Upjohn is introducing Progaine shampoo. The hair thickener is considered a companion to Rogaine and could benefit from its sound-alike name. The Progaine ad campaign, which targets both men and women, breaks today.

Women may be a responsive buying segment for hair-replacement products such as Rogaine. They spent most of the $24 billion in 1987 on over-the-counter and salon haircare, and analysts estimate the market for women's hair-growth treatments could reach $105 million in sales annually.

According to AA's Gallup findings, 13.3% of surveyed women losing their hair have sought treatment while only 9.9% of balding men have done so. The survey also shows that 38.6% of women would seek treatment if they were losing their hair; 30.4% of men say they would seek treatment.

Upjohn is betting women will be loyal purchasers because it is less socially acceptable for them to go bald. According to the marketer's estimate, 90% of the women losing their hair have male pattern baldness, which Rogaine is designed to treat.

Upjohn will set out to reach the women's market by seeking Food & Drug Administration approval this summer to market Rogaine to women. Last August, it won FDA approval to market the drug, a hair-growth stimulant comprising 2% minoxidil, to men. The ads and TV commercials do not mention Rogaine because federal regulations prohibit the use of brand names in prescription-drug advertising to consumers.

The FDA spent 2½ years sifting through Upjohn's application and 70,000 pages of documents before granting approval for Rogaine. Analysts say the FDA typically does not take as much time to approve a new application for the same product.

According to an Upjohn spokeswoman, initial 1982 and 1983 clinical trials included too few women for the company to draw "hard and fast" conclusions about how well minoxidil works on them. Upjohn began studying Rogaine's effect on women in 1987.

But women are not waiting, responding to ads for the product that show a balding man. The spokeswoman says Upjohn has received inquiries from women who have asked their physicians for Rogaine prescriptions.

Anything that broadens Rogaine's target audience would be welcome, analysts say. "Wall Street was overly excited about how well the product would do," says Robert Uhl Jr., pharmaceutical industry analyst with Salomon Bros. "Rogaine is more of a consumer product, which takes longer to build a franchise than a drug."

Rogaine also is expensive, costing about $700 to $900 annually—including visits to a physician. Once the regimen has been started, it must be used twice daily forever to prevent losing restored hair.

Based on his monthly prescription sales report, Mr. Uhl downgraded his estimate of 1989 Rogaine sales in the U.S. to $80 million from $125 million, and to $110 million from $175 million in 1990. Rogaine had about $30 million in U.S sales in 1988, according to Mr. Sweig.

Upjohn is not the only company trying to get a headstart in the market. Proanagen Corp. is conducting trials of its anti-hypertensive drug diazoxide to determine if the drug is effective in the treatment and prevention of hair loss. The company began clinical studies of its topical solution in mid-1987.

The development of diazoxide is a joint venture between Proanagen, Schering-Plough Corp. and Shiseido Co., the giant Japanese cosmetics marketer. Schering-Plough has the option to license the diazoxide hair formula for sale as a prescription drug in the U.S. and in international markets other than Japan and Southeast Asia, where Shiseido has marketing rights.

The diazoxide formula has a long way to go before it is submitted to the FDA for approval, Mr. Lufkin says. The company only recently began clinical trials to complete the regulatory agency's New Drug Application process.

Another potential competitor to minoxidil dropped out of the category in mid-1988. American Cyanamid Co. halted trials of its viprostol because of its modest response rate and cost of further studies, industry observers say. The company's Shulton USA subsidiary instead is planning to launch a line of mass market non-prescription cosmetic hair-thickener products this year.

Despite the interest in hair-growth drugs among marketers, industry analysts remain skeptical about the category's long-term prospects. But if second and third-generation products can stimulate hair growth less expensively and more effectively than Rogaine, analysts say the market likely will increase substantially.

The market's total potential will be known later rather than sooner, Mr. Sweig says. "It's a category that is heavily dependent on consumers' desire to keep their own hair." □

'Beautyspeak' runs deep in facial skincare

While talk of Desensitizing Extract or Biomimitism is norm, others go easy

By Pat Sloan

Deciphering the product claims of many skincare treatments is a little like opening up a book on etymology. The words look part Latin, part English and part French; what they mean is anyone's guess.

Under scrutiny from the Food & Drug Administration for using words such as "renewal" and "rejuvenate" too freely, most facial skincare marketers have been coining scientific-sounding terms to sell anti-wrinkle products. Because the words stop short of making actual drug claims, they do not offend the FDA.

But consumers may be confused or turned off by talk of Biomimitism and tissue matrix fluid, so some cosmetic marketers are abandoning bio-babble altogether.

Revlon Group's Ultima division is introducing a product that goes beyond toning down its claims. It makes none.

No Digitized Image Analysis here. No Micro-Targeted Microsomes or Desensitizing Extract. Ads for The Moisturizer, to be introduced in April, will make no claims, and packaging will list only standard benefits, such as hypo-allergenic, non-irritating and fragrance-free. The campaign, created in-house, breaks in May.

Lancome's Niosome system: Is it Biomimitism or is it beauty bio-babbling?

"It's a very straightforward product story," says Ultima President Andrea Robinson. "What we're putting into it are basic [ingredients] that any good product should have."

She says the claim-free ads are consumer driven and not a response to the FDA's crackdown. "It's a gut feeling on my part that women are tired of and confused by testimonials," she says.

Avon Products also is advocating a toned-down message. "Women don't know what words like Biomimisis mean," says Kathy Dwyer, Avon's skincare marketing director. "This creates skepticism; there's a feeling of 'they're trying to pull the wool over my eyes.'"

Avon last year developed Visible Improvement, six skincare products formulated with vitamins and other commonly known natural ingredients, because its research showed that "women are tired of hype," she says.

Instead of promising to minimize signs of aging and revitalize tautness, as many facial-care products do, ads for Visible Improvement, created by N W Ayer, New York, describe the product line as "... Not cure-alls. Not magic. Just simple, single-minded beauty treatments."

Additionally, the company changed advertising for its more technical BioAdvance anti-wrinkle treatment because of FDA pressure. Previous ads claimed to help invigorate the skin's biomatrix; copy now says "BioAdvance with Retinol ... Featured on national TV news and talk shows."

Several marketers are touting derivatives of vitamin A, including retinol and retinyl, in their product claims. But while they may sound like Retin-A, the only anti-wrinkle product the medical community agrees can banish wrinkles, they're not. Johnson & Johnson's Ortho Pharmaceutical unit is seeking FDA approval to market its patented Retin-A as an anti-wrinkle drug.

While Avon and Ultima minimize their ad claims along with pores, others are looking for a middle ground. Germaine Monteil Cosmetiques Corp., another Revlon division, has developed a skincare pitch that combines the simple and complex.

Two 30-second TV spots via Arnell/Bickford, New York, started running this month for Monteil's Triple Action Infusion Firmer. "Unlike some traditional ads that are claims laden, we try to go into the actual mind of the consumer and how she feels about using the product," says Jackie Hadley, VP-marketing for Revlon's Fashion and Designer Group. The product appears throughout the spots, but its scientific name is not mentioned until the end.

Not all skincare marketers are convinced that less is more when it comes to advertising youthful looks. The top three department store brands, accounting for roughly 50% of skincare sales in these outlets, all sport some tie to science.

No. 1 Clinique uses imagery in its ads, which include laboratory technicians and beakers. Its sister product line, No. 2 Estee Lauder, and rival Cosmair Inc.'s No. 3 Lancome, are heavy users of scientific language as well as symbols.

Lauder's ads for Future Perfect from "Estee Lauder Laboratories" include words such as targeted microsomes and lipids. Lancome talks up its Niosome Systeme Anti-Age and Biomimitism.

Now, Elizabeth Arden Inc. is introducing Micro 2000 Anti-Stress Complex, which like Future Perfect suggests technological advances by pointing to the future.

The marketers have been using technological jargon in product names and ad claims to replace words such as "repair, rejuvenate" and "renew," which the FDA disapproves for cosmetics skincare.

Last fall, Lauder sued the agency

Skincare shows it's a shiny spot

Skincare represents the most promising segment of the beauty business.

A proliferation of new products such as anti-aging facial treatments continues to buoy the category's sales, says Sheldon Kasowitz, research analyst at Goldman Sachs. "There's a lot of competitive activity," he notes.

Anti-aging products and facial moisturizers accounted for a large percentage of sales in 1987 and 1988, retailers say. Greater unit sales generated by higher ticket items helped many department stores register double-digit increases in 1989.

However, while many department stores continue to promote higher-price treatment items, sales of mid-price products are sagging, reports Allan Mottus, a leading industry analyst with Mottus & Associates.

"Many marketers simply aren't promoting mid-priced brands and it is hurting the business," he says. "There are consumers who are more price resistant."

This year, mass-market outlets are meeting the void with reasonably priced skincare products. Mr. Mottus says there's a myriad of products scheduled to hit the retailers' shelves in the coming weeks, including skincare lines from Clarion Cosmetics and Cosmair Inc.'s L'Oreal division.

Carey Ahsler, senior consultant at Kline & Co., believes the rush of new entries boosted sales in 1987 and 1988. But she is cautious about the future. She says category growth may be affected by the Food & Drug Administration's efforts to crack down on ad and product claims.

Jeffrey Ashenberg, an analyst at Dean Witter, echoes her concern and adds, "Believable taglines are very important in retaining customers in this category."

Most analysts agree that suncare is the category's brightest spot. In 1987 and 1988, the sub-segment "benefited from all the publicity and warnings of how bad the sun is for your skin," says Paul Cohen, publisher-editor of Beauty Age, a leading trade publication.

Customizing catches on

Specially positioned products, items with moisturizing and anti-aging benefits and new entries boasting mistake-proof, custom color have given the color cosmetics category a much needed 6.5% boost.

However, "the basic business is not seeing the kind of increases desired," Mr. Mottus says. "During the holiday season, the big bulk promotions created impact but not the regular stock items.

"In 1988, color cosmetics slid through with a 3% to 4% unit growth," he adds, citing specially positioned products such as Terracotta and Meteorites from Guerlain Inc. as being among the winners.

Face powder showed tremendous growth in 1987, says Ms. Ahsler, and she expects to see similar increases in 1988 when final sales figures are analyzed.

The entire foundation sub-category is continuing on an upward trend, reports a cosmetics buyer at a major Northeast department store chain. "Foundations are the strongest segment of our makeup business," she says.

Although still a very small portion of overall sales, custom color has potential, she says, adding that new, innovative products will continue to fuel category sales.

"Consumers are gravitating toward products that are good for the skin. The Lauder Perfect Lipstick is a good example because it contains moisturizing and anti-aging properties," she says. Shiseido's repositioned color cosmetics also are right on track, she says.

Line extensions bolster haircare

The haircare industry continues to shine as consumers concentrate on keeping their locks clean and healthy.

"There is momentum left in many line extensions in the haircare category. Many existing brands [such as Helene Curtis Industries' Finesse] are being repositioned," Mr. Kasowitz says.

Ms. Ahsler says hair-styling aids, the No. 1 subsegment, is showing sizable sales gains.

"We saw a boom in specialty haircare and styling products," she adds.

Women continue to use hair fixatives, but Mr. Mottus says "they have become more cautious about coloring and perming their hair.

"Women are more active and are shampooing and conditioning more frequently," he says.

The quest for healthy, clean hair has been a boon to higher price salon products and brands sold at mass market but positioned as salon-inspired brands, such as Helene Curtis' Salon Selectives, Vidal Sassoon and Paul Mitchell Systems, Mr. Mottus says.

Prices cool fragrances

The fragrance category, posting the slowest growth in the beauty industry, is awash in high prices and an overabundance of new entries, analysts say.

"The fragrance category is flat unit wise," says Mr. Ashenberg. "Dollars are up only slightly. Part of the problem is the [product] life cycle continues to grow shorter."

Additionally, consumers are becoming increasingly price resistant, Mr. Mottus says. He attributes sagging sales in part to higher prices at retail. "Many of the new entry points have climbed above $30," he says.

There has been an emergence of new fragrances, "but it does not represent a category of high growth," reports Ms. Ahsler. "We reported a 3.5% growth for women's fragrances in the middle-priced categories and a mere 2.5% growth for men's fragrances."

Major retailers echo Ms. Ahsler's assessment. Karen Durham, corporate merchandising manager for Jack Eckerd Corp., a 1,600-plus drugstore retailer, says 1988 holiday sales were disappointing.

"Women's fragrance sales were flat to down about 2% this year. Men's fragrance sales were flat as well," she reported at the annual Fragrance Foundation Review of Christmas Past.

One bright spot in this lackluster category is the bath sub-category. Another sub-category to watch, although still small, is environmental fragrances. In 1987, consumers reportedly spent more than $250 million on environmental fragrances, including scented candles, sachets, potpourri, solid perfume oils and scent discs. □

MAXWELL'S MARKET SHARES

Liquor sales to stay on downward course

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

The overriding theme of the liquor industry last year was predictability, as sales fell again.

Total distilled spirits sales were off 3.3%, domestic spirits dropped 4.1% and imports fell 0.7%.

As has been the case for the past few years, some segments experienced growth. But whiskey, including bonds, blends, straights, Canadians and scotches, declined.

Imported vodka again outperformed all other categories, and domestic vodka followed on the imports' success.

The other spirit that exhibited impressive growth in 1987 and 1988 was tequila, largely attributable to Heublein's Jose Cuervo, up about 15.1% in unit volume last year.

In the 1980s, brown spirits have had a downward drift in sales, with a proportional increase in white spirits sales.

The outlook for 1989 is for yet another year of slight volume decline in spirits, with the exception of specific imports such as vodka.

The top 10 brands of 1988 were the same as in 1987. Bacardi Imports' Bacardi remained No. 1, showing a modest 0.4% decline, though actually increasing market share 0.2 share points to 5%. Four of the top 10 showed volume declines.

Of the 1988 leading brands (those that sell more than 1 million cases), only 15 of the 34 brands showed volume gains. Carillon Importers' Absolut vodka moved up from 21st to 18th place on a 28.6% volume increase. Jose Cuervo tequila moved from No. 19 to No. 17.

In addition to Absolut's growth, Finlandia vodka (Heublein) sales jumped 25% to 375,000 cases and Stolichnaya (Monsieur Henri) sales increased 18.1% to 905,000 cases.

It appears that drinking vodka on the rocks is becoming more of a status symbol among younger drinkers, thus explaining the demand for higher-quality imports. As a result, Glenmore Distilleries has introduced Elduris' Icelandic vodka at the superpremium price of $12 to $14 a bottle.

One of the other significant developments of 1988 may turn out to be the decrease in cordials and liqueurs, down 6.5% in case sales.

Notable is a slowdown in James B. Beam Distilling Co.'s DeKuyper business, which was responsible for much of the category's growth in the past. The cordial/liqueur segment is expected to remain relatively stable; this type of drink has appeal in the accelerating trend toward lower-proof "healthier" alcoholic drinks.

Among the liquor companies, Seagram Co. remained No. 1, increasing market share to 13.5% from 13.2% while total sales declined slightly. The only rank change was Hiram Walker Inc.'s move to fourth from fifth place, edging out Brown-Forman Corp.#

New tune for Hit Video

Programmer adds to broadcast base

By CHRISTY FISHER

Hit Video USA, the music video network that challenged MTV Networks' market dominance, is working aggressively to expand its affiliate base both domestically and abroad.

At the National Association of Television Program Executives convention in Houston last month, Hit Video said it had reached an agreement with International Broadcast Systems, which distributes TV programming to 92 countries abroad.

In addition, Hit Video believes it received enough commitments from U.S. broadcast affiliates at the NATPE show to reach at least half the 90 million U.S. TV households. When that goal is attained, it plans to start wooing national advertisers.

The music video programmer can look to its future since settling in November its 3-year-old lawsuit against MTV Networks.

In 1985, Hit Video filed a $250 million antitrust suit against MTV Networks, challenging MTV's exclusivity agreements with cable operators and certain video artists. Terms of the settlement weren't disclosed.

"There is room for a peaceful co-existence between Hit Video USA and MTV—although there will always be a competitive spirit," said Connie Wodlinger, president-ceo of Wodlinger Broadcasting, Hit Video's parent.

The reason for the abrupt about-face? Hit Video no longer competes head-on with MTV Networks' MTV: Music Television or VH-1: Video Hits One and it won't compete with MTV Europe.

It has repositioned from a 24-hour music video service primarily for cable to an all-day or partial-day service for network and independent broadcast affiliates.

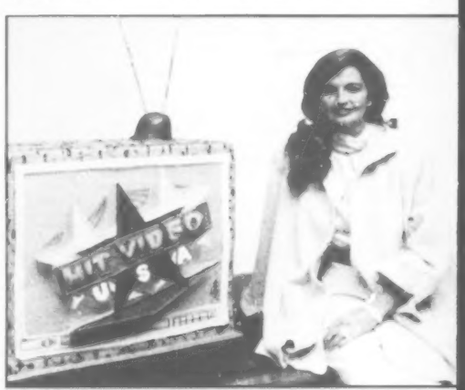
Hit Video now claims to be the largest producer and syndicator of music programming for broadcast TV. It offers 70 hours a week or 10 hours a day of original programming that serves 38 affiliates and reaches more than 41 million TV households.

By yearend, the company expects to reach 60 million to 65 million U.S. households and show its first profit since its inception in 1985.

Hit Video is targeting 245 full-power stations now under construction. These new stations are most likely to need economical programming, and Hit Video offers this through barter syndication, Ms. Wodlinger said.

Under the arrangement, the programming is free, but Hit Video and the station sell commercial time.

A print campaign in trade publications could follow in the third and fourth quarters. West Associates Advertising, Leawood, Kan., handles.



Hit Video USA President-CEO Connie Wodlinger hopes to get more viewers to tune in domestically and abroad.

Despite the new-station emphasis, Hit Video could achieve most of its growth by offering more flexible program packages, Ms. Wodlinger said.

Instead of its standard 70-hour-a-week package, Hit Video is pushing a variety of packages in which programming can be purchased as needed. By doing this, Hit Video hopes to capture more affiliates and gain more daytime presence and prime advertising time.

If there's enough interest, Hit Video may even eventually return to 24-hour cable programming, Ms. Wodlinger said.

But David Benjamin, producer of NBC-TV's "Friday Night Videos," questions whether the music video programming industry has already seen its glory days.

"The heyday of music video was a couple of years ago," Mr. Benjamin said. "What [the industry] is into now is improving programming and holding audience share."

But not all industry observers agree. Mitchell Rowen, publisher of CVC Video Report, said that though there's been a shakeout, the industry has stabilized and "there certainly is a large market in local broadcast TV that has not been fully exploited."#

Decency debate

Angered by 'lewd' TV programs, groups threaten sponsor boycotts

By WAYNE WALLEY

A new wave of action by the public and major advertisers was unleashed last week against leniency in TV programming.

Coca-Cola USA, Campbell Soup Co., Ralston Purina Co., Kimberly-Clark Corp. and other marketers are upset, both with programs they deem unacceptable ad vehicles and with embarrassing letter-writing campaigns castigating them for time buys.

This controversy appears likely to lead to a new round of attempted consumer boycotts of product marketers that sponsor programs deemed offensive.

Much of this was triggered by a one-woman crusade against Fox Broadcasting Co.'s "Married . . . With Children." Coca-Cola and other companies appear to have answered the Bloomfield Hills, Mich., woman's complaints by either pulling ads from the show or expressing concern.

Terry Rakolta's letter-writing campaign was reported last week in a front-page story in The New York Times (see story on Page 74).

The 41-year-old woman said on ABC-TV's "Nightline" March 2 she'd organize a group to boycott sponsors that support programs such as "Married . . . With Children."

"Married . . . With Children," the most popular Fox show and often described as the antithesis of the more wholesome "The Cosby Show," has lost support of advertisers including Kimberly-Clark and Tambrands.

Those marketers were said to have re-evaluated their sponsorship of the show in part because of Mrs. Rakolta's complaints.

Kimberly-Clark advertised in two episodes of "Married . . . With Children" but said it previously had decided not to continue advertising and emphasized its action wasn't a result of Mrs. Rakolta's letter to the company.

> "They are allowing things like the word 'bastard' to naturally flow in 'L.A. Law,' but they won't approve of a commercial with the word 'damn.' "

In a letter to Mrs. Rakolta, Tambrands said the company is "continually reviewing editorial content of our advertising, and upon further review of 'Married . . . With Children,' we have canceled our participation for the remainder of 1989."

Although Fox Broadcasting executives wouldn't discuss the matter, they issued a statement claiming "the article that appeared in The New York Times was inaccurate."

They said none of the three advertisers cited in the Times article—Coca-Cola, Procter & Gamble and McDonald's Corp.—had actually pulled any national ads because none of their spots had been scheduled to run.

Fox officials said the show was sold out for the year, with a waiting list of sponsors.

The public furor over TV programming, which resurfaces every few years, is fueled this time by the apparent relaxation of network TV standards

Carnation links pay, research

By MARCY MAGIERA

LOS ANGELES—Carnation Co. is installing an unusual agency incentive payment system based on how advertising scores in research.

This could mean higher or lower compensation, depending on the testing results.

The Nestle subsidiary's agencies will earn higher pay if their advertising hits pre-established, negotiated target scores in testing done by Advertising Research Systems, Evansville, Ind.

J. McMennamin

The testing will be done before a campaign breaks, but the incentive-pay tabulations will be done at the end of the year, said John McMennamin, Carnation VP-marketing services.

Work also needs to come in on time and on budget, he said.

Carnation spends an estimated $60 million annually on advertising. That figure is steadily increasing, said Mr. McMennamin, though he declined to share how much.

Mr. McMennamin said the system is based on research rather than sales, profits or market share "because there's not a way of tying those explicitly to advertising."

He said Carnation's program, developed in-house with the help of its lead agency, Lintas:New York, is the only compensation plan he knows of based on ad research.

Alvin Achenbaum, chairman of marketing consultancy Canter Achenbaum, Associates, echoed Mr. McMennamin's statement and praised Carnation's choice of research test scores as its incentive base.

"One positive thing [about Carnation's plan]—it's related to advertising as opposed to related to sales, which are a function of many things," Mr. Achenbaum

Comart fires Boston chief Loconte over rift

By ALAN RADDING

BOSTON—A key executive at Comart/KLP Group's 3-month-old sales promotion shop here was suddenly dismissed last week, causing the shop to briefly shut down.

Comart/KLP President Vincent Sottosanti, based in New York, gave John Loconte his walking papers after what Mr. Sottosanti described as a "business disagreement." Mr. Loconte was Comart/KLP exec VP as well as head of this office.

The shop, which closed on Feb. 28 and reopened March 2, is the first U.S. start-up for London-based Comart/KLP Group.

The group positions itself as the world's biggest international sales promotion and direct-response marketing company, and traditionally grows through acquisitions.

Exec VP Irwin Towers, based in New York, temporarily will head the office until a permanent, locally based manager can be found.

Mr. Sottosanti, who is also president of the Council of Sales Promotion Agencies, said Mr. Loconte's dismissal isn't an indication that Comart is disillusioned with the opening of the office here.

"We're trying to verify some numbers," he added, declining to elaborate.

Chief Financial Officer Donna Pantaleo accompanied Mr. Sottosanti to Boston.

According to figures provided by Mr. Loconte, the office generated more than $1.2 million in revenue since opening in late October (AA, Feb. 20). It hadn't yet been named agency of record for any clients.

Mr. Loconte said he was surprised by the dismissal

Saatchis feel new pressure as exec exits

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—Saatchi & Saatchi Co., under pressure from the financial community to keep up its strong earnings growth, was under a different kind of pressure last week.

An executive defection and complaints from one of the group's key U.S. agency executives about bonuses have exacerbated the Saatchis' already delicate task of satisfying the "City," London's version of Wall Street.

In a major change, David Newlands, 42, is leaving his post as group finance director at the Saatchi holding company here to become finance director of General Electric Co.'s London operation.

Mr. Newlands will be replaced by Andrew Woods, 45, the New York-based group deputy chairman and chairman of Saatchi & Saatchi Holdings USA. Mr. Woods was in charge of acquisitions and responsible for building U.S. operations.

Saatchi watchers here suggest the company no longer wanted a heavyweight finance executive at the small U.S. unit now that the company isn't doing large deals there. The departure of another S&S Holdings USA executive, Deputy Chairman Anne McBride, was announced in January.

"Saatchi has bought what they're going to buy in America [on the communications side], and now they're going to concentrate on growing what they've got," a U.K. analyst said. "They're running down the [holdings unit]. Saatchi is good at [redeploying] resources."

Later in the week came the news that Carl Spielvogel, chairman-ceo of Saatchi's Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, was "surprised" to read in Saatchi's annual report that the company's directors had voted themselves stock options during the past year.

The annual report records a 25% pay increase for Saatchi Chairman Maurice Saatchi and an unnamed director, presumed to be Charles Saatchi, to $1.1 million each in 1988, following a 77% increase in pretax profits the previous year. This compares with 1987, when the brothers enjoyed a 40% salary hike.

Mr. Spielvogel said he'd tried to get stock for his senior executives and was told there was none available.

The Saatchis have problems issuing large amounts of stock to employees because the price is depressed and so much stock has been issued for acquisitions.

"I'm trying to protect the interest of our key people," said Mr. Spielvogel. He said receiving stock is important because "we've thrown in with the worldwide parent company. There is supposed to be synergy, and you get that by everyone working to increase the value of the stock."

He said he was surprised that Mr. Newlands resigned. "We had a very good working relationship," Mr. Spielvogel said.

The latest developments don't help the Saatchis, who are grappling with an up-and-down image within the financial community.

"I think they're still viewed with suspicion," a U.K. analyst said. "They've used the City like a piggy bank [to raise money]. . . . But Maurice [Saatchi] hasn't come out from his closet. . . . People feel that unless they can talk to the key movers, they can't really trust them."#

Ayer feels the heat as BK, FCB meet

By SCOTT HUME

Burger King Corp. may decide soon whether to keep N W Ayer, and retention isn't the likeliest of the company's three options, insiders say.

The betting is that Burger King will choose between throwing the account open to a full review or simply putting the $150 million-to-$200 million account in the lap of Foote, Cone & Belding.

FCB's chances appeared to have strengthened after several top-level Burger King executives visited the agency's Chicago offices March 1.

The following day, Ayer Vice Chairman Jerry Siano visited Burger King on what agency sources say was an attempt to get continuing approval for the New York agency's work on a successor to the "We do it like you do it" campaign.

A Burger King spokeswoman said she "wouldn't say that FCB was pitching the account" but didn't deny the meeting concerned the No. 2 hamburger chain's national account.

The agency had already pitched the account last fall and believed it had the business until the unexpected ouster in December of Exec VP-Marketing Anthony Lavely.

An agency decision could come before parent Grand Metropolitan puts a new chief marketing executive in place at the chain.

One source said Burger King Exec VP-Director of Marketing Don Dempsey wanted CEO Barry Gibbons "to see what FCB has come up with before making any decision. FCB is ready to go on the account; they're an option."

FCB's Chicago office already is on Grand Met's roster, handling its Pearle Health Services unit.

FCB executives didn't return phone calls.

Ayer wasn't told about last week's FCB meeting, Ayer insiders said. Neither were any of the franchisees contacted.

"There is an awful lot of pressure right now to make changes" throughout Pillsbury Co., including Burger King, said one company insider. "Pressure to remove Ayer is part of that."

But Burger King maintained "nothing really has changed."

"N W Ayer is still our agency of record," the spokeswoman said.#

FOCUS ON AGENCIES

Shops shape up for foreign growth

By GARY LEVIN

Dramatic increases in international ad spending—and a simultaneous slowdown in U.S. growth—is leading major U.S. agencies to reorganize.

These agencies are focusing their attention on getting better management, more services and better profits in overseas operations (see related story, Page 75).

Much of their attention is focused on Europe, where the removal of panregional marketing barriers by 1992 is causing account consolidation and market expansion.

Some shops are also narrowing their lists of primary competitors by the nature of the business they pitch, and an elite group of truly "global" agencies is emerging to chase panregional accounts.

In recent moves:

- BBDO Worldwide and Lintas: Worldwide set up a European board of directors and an "executive group," respectively. Also, Lintas named Barry Day vice chairman and director of international advertising development, a new post, from assistant to the chairman of parent Interpublic Group of Cos.
- Ogilvy & Mather named a European creative director and a new European chairman, eliminating three "subregional" posts.
- DDB Needham Worldwide moved its international headquarters to Paris from New York but added a new exec VP post in New York to run global accounts.
- J. Walter Thompson Co. and BBDO also have named executives or new agency units to exclusively manage multinational accounts. "You will see a cadre of people who will work cross-culturally and multilingually," said Simon Marlow, exec VP and director of a new multinational unit at BBDO.

Many of these moves are designed to boost the international fortunes of agencies that have tried to play catchup to several shops with long-established overseas offices, including Interpublic's Lintas and McCann-Erickson Worldwide; O&M; JWT; and Young & Rubicam.

Below that tier, a middle group of agencies is rapidly expanding their international networks. That group includes Omnicom Group's BBDO and DDB Needham, along with D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles and Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, which this month completed its joint venture with France's Publicis.

Finally, a group of smaller shops struggling to build international networks—including N W Ayer, Bozell Inc. and Ketchum Advertising—will find it harder to attract extensive multinational accounts.

"In general, with the globalization I clearly see that eventually we will see maybe three or four super global agencies that are truly worldwide," said Jagdish Sheth, the Robert E. Brooker Distinguished Professor of Marketing at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles.

He views Saatchi & Saatchi Co., Japan's Dentsu and Y&R as the most likely major agencies in this group, to emerge "by the turn of the century at the latest.

"Then you will see second-tier players who will begin to specialize by industry, and they would like to go global . . . but in a niche market," he said.

In these cases, agencies would have a few large clients on a worldwide basis or several smaller ones in industries such as banking and telecommunications.

Mr. Sheth predicts a third tier of shops will specialize in a single medium such as print advertising, TV or direct mail.

Dollars and sense are stirring this rethinking. Last year, Ogilvy Group's international revenues for the first time outweighed its U.S. business, and nearly every other major agency has grown increasingly dependent on foreign income to fuel growth.

Close to 56% of JWT's new-business gains in 1988 came from outside its U.S. network.

"Any large agency concerned with continued revenue growth has got to be putting emphasis on building multinational accounts," said Allen Rosenshine, president-ceo at Omnicom, whose international business represents a third of its total revenues, up from 27% in 1986.

Ayer expects international revenues to account for more than a third of its total this year, up from 20% in 1987, due partly to increased ownership of overseas affiliates.

As a percentage of total billings and revenues, "foreign share is almost universally going up," said Alan Gottesman, analyst at Paine-Webber Group.

Robert Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting at McCann, earlier predicted that in 1988, for the first time, overseas spending would outpace U.S. advertising, $121.4 billion to $118.3 billion. For 1989, he projects overseas ad spending will rise 12% to $136 billion, while U.S. spending will climb just 6.1% to $125.6 billion (AA, Dec. 19).

William C. Thompson Jr., JWT vice chairman-client operations, said the overseas growth goes beyond 1992.

"1992 is a precipitating element for sure, but it doesn't change what multinational companies are trying to do" in expanding their brands to more countries, he said.

Instead, the deregulation "gives them a finite time frame in which it has to be done; it adds a sense of urgency, [but] the growth is there anyhow," Mr. Thompson said.

Unlike the early 1980s, "the U.S. [now] is a saturated market with minimal growth," said Peter Georgescu, president of Y&R Advertising.

Agencies are also expanding their non-media ad businesses overseas.

Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide is spreading its Kobs & Draft direct-marketing agency into every major European market. Y&R plans to buy event and sports marketing companies in Europe and expects that 40% of its business there will be outside media advertising by yearend.

But international growth has brought some disagreements in strategy. Some believe that agencies have to be "available everywhere with the same homogeneous kind of service," said Bernard Brochand, president-international at DDB Needham. "When you get it and offer the right service, you have great potential to increase the loyalty of the client and so to have some security."

But others disagree and expect to see global agencies closing or merging unprofitable second offices in some countries, and even reducing investment in marginal countries in which there's relatively little client interest.

As clients align businesses with global agencies, some shops are concerned that purely local clients will get less attention. More than 40% of O&M's worldwide business comes from multinationals, "but we're not anxious for it to become much higher," said Kenneth Roman, chairman-ceo of parent Ogilvy Group.

"If [local offices] only have international accounts, that says they can't win business on their own," he said. "If they only have local accounts, then who needs us as partners?"

Still, agencies with panregional assignments often must invest in new offices for a single client, forsaking short-term profits.

They sometimes negotiate "coordination fees" to compensate for these costs and for the logistical demands of handling business in several countries.

But even these don't often help, despite an overseas commission system that more typically amounts to 15% of spending than it does in the U.S.

"Generally speaking, in my experience there's considerable strain on agency profitability even with coordination fees, because we haven't developed sufficient systems," Mr. Rosenshine said. Clients "do not like to be the product of cost-efficiencies. They like attention, and attention is another human being."#

Bernard Brochand plans international growth through acquisitions.

DDB's Brochand is eager to buy

By GARY LEVIN

Bernard Brochand, the newly installed president of DDB Needham Worldwide's international unit, plans to resume an aggressive acquisition policy to boost the agency's presence in Europe and the fast-growing Asia/Pacific region.

Aside from joint venture deals, such as one with Japan's Dai-Ichi Kikaku, "there have been no acquisitions since the Omnicom merger," Mr. Brochand said.

"The growth has been internal," he said. "But that will not be sufficient to grow our international [operations], and we will again come to a strong policy of acquisitions in Europe and in Asia, not only with general agencies but in 'below-the-line' " marketing services.

The agency has been affiliating with or acquiring minority stakes in some foreign shops since the 1960s with an eye toward increasing its ownership. Under Mr. Brochand's plan, it will expand that approach to include outright acquisitions.

Top priorities for boosting the agency's foreign operations include West Germany and the U.K. in Europe, and South Korea, Singapore and Taiwan in Asia, Mr. Brochand said.

A week before Mr. Brochand became president-international on Jan. 25, DDB Needham signed an affiliation agreement with Daehong Advertising in Seoul, a $143 million agency ranked second there that American Stores paces ad productivity

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

American Stores dominated top national advertisers in ad productivity growth in the third quarter of 1988, according to an ADVERTISING AGE study.

The retail food company's purchase of Lucky Stores last October nearly doubled its fiscal third-quarter ad outlay in real terms, compared with the same period in 1987, while contributing heavily to a sales figure of $4.94 billion, up 42.3%.

In the purchase, American Stores also added Eagle Supermarkets, Food Basket Food Stores, Kash 'N Karry Food Centers and Sirloin Stockade Restaurants.

Ad productivity, a critical measurement in determining the effectiveness of a marketing strategy, is derived from U.S. revenues generated by $1 of advertising. Final contenders for the top spot not only must record ad productivity growth but year-to-year gains in measured-media advertising and U.S. sales.

The survey culled an elite list of 100 advertisers from AD AGE's ranking of the 200 leading national advertisers of 1987 published in 1988.

Increases in third-quarter advertising and U.S. sales placed Hewlett-Packard Co. atop the list of contenders in both categories, but H-P's ad productivity growth was only 8.6% over its prior-year period. Both advertising and sales growth included incremental increases across the H-P product line.

Greyhound Corp. continued to perform well in ad productivity growth as it claimed the No. 1 spot in the second quarter of 1988 and a second-place finish in the third quarter.

AD AGE previously had crowned Greyhound the first quarter 1988 winner (AA, August 22, 1988).

Greyhound recorded a 28.5% growth in ad productivity in the second quarter and 36.9% in the third.

In the second quarter, Greyhound emerged the victor from a field of 21 contenders.

Greyhound's ad productivity growth was largely sales driven as the company's estimated U.S. sales increased 39.2% to $853.5 million while measured advertising grew a modest 8.3% to $11.9 million.

Greyhound reduced second quarter advertising for Dial soap, the company's largest advertised brand, to support new product extensions, Dial Liquid soap and Dial deodorant. Ad expenditures for Tone soap increased as those for Pure & Natural soap declined.

Also Greyhound began to support heavily its consumer food unit's Lunch Bucket microwave meals and Premier Cruises.

Seagram Co., fifth place finisher with ad productivity growth of 20.4% for the quarter, reported the largest gains in both advertising and sales among the finalists—19.2% and 43.5%—respectively.

Seagram's ad gain largely came from increased support of its various whiskies: Chivas Regal and Glenlivet scotch whiskies, Seagram 7 Crown whisky and Seagram Crown Royal whisky.

On the sales side, Seagram drew heavily from its acquisition of Tropicana Products from Beatrice Cos. The April '88 acquisition meant Tropicana returns were folded only into current-year totals.

Seagram showed $6.8 million in quarterly spending for Tropicana products, slightly below pre-acquisition quarterly totals.

The strength of advertisers finishing high in the ad productivity rankings rests on their ability to increase quarterly ad expenditures as measured by Broadcast Advertisers Reports/Leading National Advertisers and Radio Expenditure Reports, and also boost sales.

For example, Greyhound sales were stimulated by the acquisitions in late 1987 of Dobbs International Services, an in-flight catering company and operator of Dobbs House airport concessions, and U.S. Borax & Chemical Corp.

Among 18 categories comprising the 100 companies, three showed growth in the three measurements in the third quarter. Retail, a composite of 11 companies, was the winning category. Chemicals, comprising five companies, took honors in the second quarter. #

NOTES AND METHODOLOGY

Currency: All dollars are in millions except revenues per $1 in ad spending which are in actual dollars.

Sources: Quarterly ad spending from Broadcast Advertisers Reports/Leading National Advertisers and Radio Expenditure Reports. Figures include magazine and newspaper spending from Publishers Information Bureau as reported by LNA; spot TV, network TV, cable TV networks and network radio spending as reported by BAR; outdoor spending as reported by LNA, and spot radio spending as reported by Radio Expenditure Reports. Revenues are for U.S. quarterly sales only and are AA estimates calculated by multiplying quarterly worldwide sales by the company's percentage of U.S. to worldwide revenues for the full preceding year. This procedure is followed because few public companies report quarter U.S. sales, although they do publish year-end U.S. geographic sales breakouts.

Methodology: 100 public companies are selected from AD AGE's 200 leading national advertisers of 1988. To reach the top 10 ranking, companies must have quarterly year-to-year increases in measured media ad spending, U.S. sales and U.S. sales per $1 ad spending. The final ranking is based on percentage year-to-year growth in U.S. sales per $1 ad spending for the quarter. Quarterly advertising figures are on calendar periods. Fiscal quarters most closely matching calendar quarters are used for sales figures. BAR/LNA prior-year figures are reported on a pro forma basis as 5 current-year brand acquisitions were owned in the previous year.

Syndicates

away," says Mr. Salem.

"Most of their activity so far has been in the area of taking over already well-established syndicated talents. Anyone can see by the history of the Washington Post Writers Group that's not how we choose to make our living," says Mr. Leeds.

Mr. Newcombe responds that switching is healthy. "It forces the syndicates to stay on their toes, which is good for newspapers and their readers."

Willard Colston, chairman of Mr. Newcombe's former employer, the Los Angeles Times Syndicate, says there has been a general increase in artists changing syndicates.

Ms. Landers says talk of raiding talent is unfounded. "Everyone who has come to him has come to him because he [Mr. Newcomb] can give them a better deal," she says. "They like the idea of a short contract and their own name. It's very appealing to people who have been darn near indentured slaves.

"Rick's critics are speaking strictly out of jealousy and out of fear," she says, claiming that "they don't want a guy around in the business who offers these kinds of benefits."

Creators achieved first-year revenues close to its $2.5 million projection, says Mr. Newcombe. And the syndicate more than doubled that figure in its second year of operation.

In spite of the signs of success, Creators' long-term viability remains to be proven, says David Astor, associate editor of Editor & Publisher.

A syndicate receives a smaller percentage of revenue from an established talent such as Ms. Landers, says Mr. Astor. A critical issue is Creators' ability to sign emerging talent.

"They got a lot of major cartoonists and columnists and jumped into the top 10 immediately, but there's still a question of whether they can make enough revenue to survive," Mr. Astor says. "It's still not 100% guaranteed they'll survive, but I think the chances are very good." □

Outside—looking covetously in

By Jill L. Sherer

In a field of about 1,650 daily newspapers in the U.S., with an estimated 840 publishing on Sunday, many of the "have nots" are carefully watching recent Sunday startups.

The Washington Times, The (Quincy, Mass.) Patriot Ledger, The Bangor (Maine) Daily News and Schenectady (N.Y.) Gazette, are the largest newspapers without a Sunday edition—with No. 1, the New York Post, just dropping off the list.

It's questionable whether or not the New York Post will be able to maintain a substantial piece of the advertising pie, says Lauren Fine, industry analyst for Merrill Lynch, who feels the Post's recent Sunday startup will stir additional interest throughout the industry.

The Schenectady Gazette is a newspaper already convinced that a Sunday newspaper is necessary.

"Our current plans show we will be publishing the Sunday paper sometime in 1990," says Ernest Grandy, Gazette assistant general manager.

"We are already canvassing ads and getting opinions, and the response has been positive."

According to a Gazette study, more than 60% of its advertisers expressed an interest in extending their business to a seventh day.

"We have recognized the need . . . however, we needed a larger facility," says Mr. Grandy. A recently built 111,000 square foot plant answers that hold-up.

"We have no projections on ad revenues but assume there will be a healthy increase," he says. "The idea is something we have wanted to do since 1980—and it's still in its formative stages. We feel the survey, though incomplete, will help us along the way."

For the Bangor Daily News, the startup issue is colored by the state's blue laws, which affect most major businesses. If Maine's blue laws were changed, says Rick Warren, publisher of the Bangor Daily News, "we'd be starting a Sunday edition as quickly as we could."

Starting a Sunday paper for a suburban daily is a major financial decision for the Patriot Ledger.

"We do look at it from time to time, do research every two or three years and try to determine if it's for us. Our advertisers and readers indicate that they like the paper as it is," says Richard Allen, general manager.

The question of an additional project and added costs are major issues. "It could take from one to five years to go into the black. But, it is not a dead issue."

Ronald S. Godwin, senior VP at the Washington Times, worries about the cost of adding a Sunday edition.

However, "We are much closer today to feeling that the benefits would balance the costs than they would have yesterday," Mr. Godwin says. "We are one or two years away from a startup."

Sunday papers are not always on order, says Ms. Fine. "I am not convinced that people are saying, 'Why didn't the Post go Sunday sooner?' I think people [in the industry] are saying, that's interesting, let's see what happens." □

"[The 'Washington Times' is] much closer today to feeling that the benefits would balance the costs than they would have yesterday. We are one or two years away from a startup."

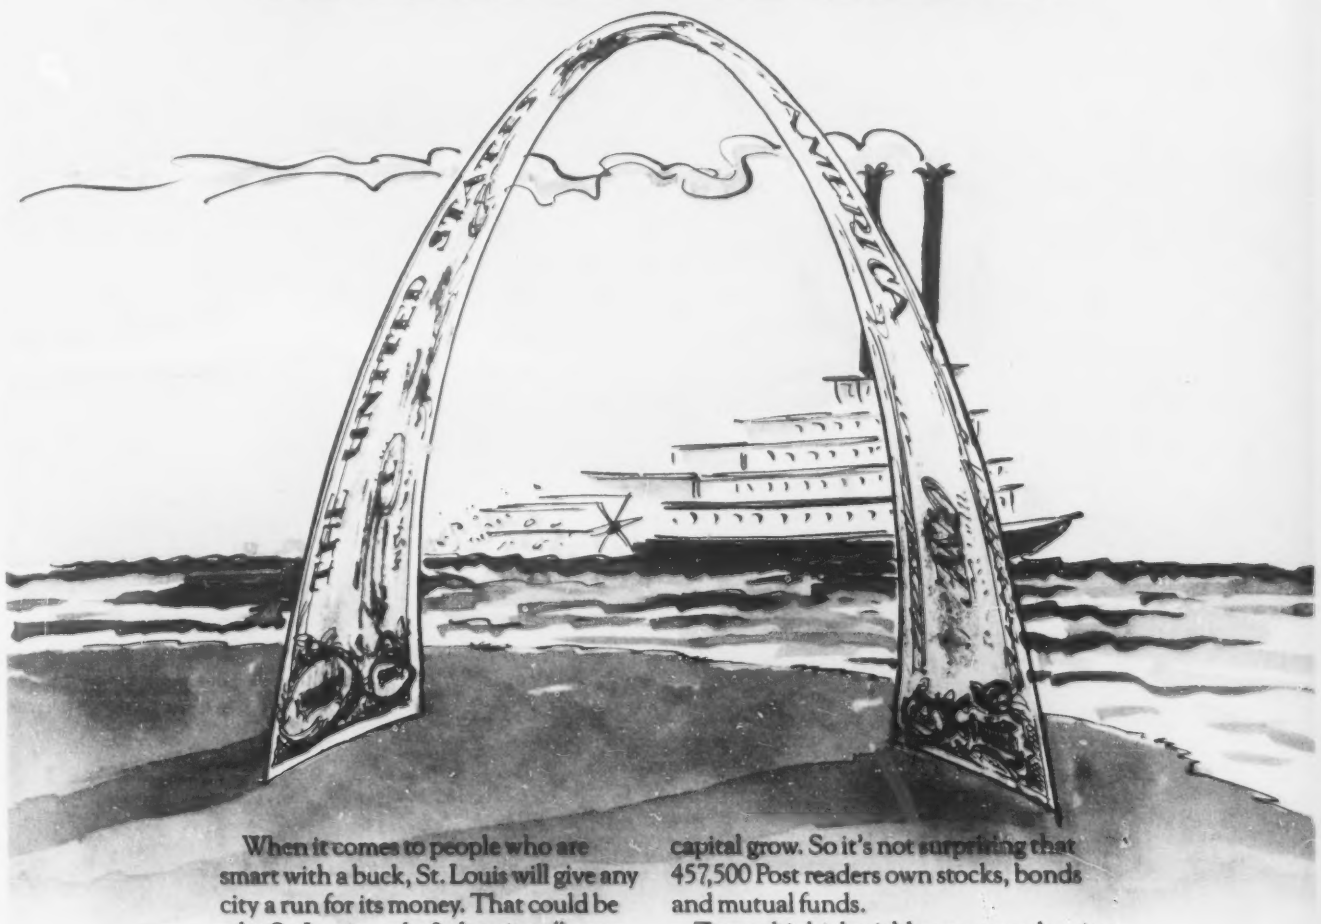
ST. LOUIS IS A CAPITAL CITY.



When it comes to people who are smart with a buck, St. Louis will give any city a run for its money. That could be why St. Louis ranks 3rd nationally as a headquarters for Top 100 Companies.

And the best way to reach the banks of the Mississippi is the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. St. Louisans with household incomes of $35,000* are 20% more likely to read the Post. What's more, 214,000 of the daily Post readers spend their days in professional and managerial jobs.

These are people who are constantly looking for better ways to make their capital grow. So it's not surprising that 457,500 Post readers own stocks, bonds and mutual funds.

Kobs, Bayer Bess link up

Unit divides creative, consulting

By IRA TEINOWITZ
and JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

CHICAGO—Jim Kobs' new direct-marketing agency may be the harbinger of future specialty divisions under the wing of Bayer Bess Vanderwarker.

Kobs, Gregory & Passavant opens April 3 as an affiliate of Bayer Bess, one of the Midwest's fastest-growing shops. Bayer Bess has an equity stake in the new agency, which will share its clients and office space.

Both Mr. Kobs and the principals of Bayer Bess (spun off from Saatchi's Backer Spielvogel Bates) share a desire to remain independent agencies.

"We're both trying to be quality, medium-size agencies small enough to have principals involved directly with the clients," said Mr. Kobs, 50, who will be chairman-ceo of the new shop.

Those goals may lead Bayer Bess into other such affiliations. The agency late last year opened Studio City here, an in-house production division, and President Ron Bess said Bayer Bess also is looking at a similar arrangement to handle promotional marketing.

For his part, Mr. Kobs hopes the setup will give him a chance to prove that direct marketing can be efficient, effective and independent without coming from a boutique shop.

J. Kobs

R. Bess

The new agency will be unlike any other because account management won't necessarily be a normal function of client contact, he said.

Instead, the shop will offer a consulting service and a creative service, with clients able to buy either service or both, depending on their needs.

"Creative costs are getting out of sight," Mr. Kobs said. "At the same time, package-goods companies are getting more sophisticated."

Companies that know their strategies can buy creative for tactics, while those who want strategies can buy the consulting service, he said.

Mr. Kobs co-founded Kobs & Brady in 1978 and built it into one of the world's largest direct-marketing agencies before selling it to Ted Bates Worldwide in March 1986.

Kobs & Brady subsequently became a part of Saatchi & Saatchi Co., after the British agency's May 1986 purchase of Bates, and was renamed Kobs & Draft last April. Mr. Kobs resigned as Kobs & Draft vice chairman in September.

Kobs, Gregory & Passavant will open three days after the expiration of Mr. Kobs' non-compete clause with his old company.

Joining Mr. Kobs at the new agency will be Pierre Passavant, the agency's president-chief operating officer, and William Gregory, exec VP-chief creative officer.

Mr. Passavant is a former senior VP of Wunderman Worldwide, New York, the nation's largest direct-marketing agency.

Mr. Gregory was exec VP-director of creative services at Kobs & Brady from 1978 to 1986.

He most recently was exec VP of Zivi, Kopelman & Associates, a direct-marketing shop here.

Mr. Kobs said the new agency will open with 10 employees, including the executives. He also hopes to open with a few clients, which will include the Direct Marketing Association and at least one of Bayer Bess' clients: St. Paul Federal Bank.

Direct-marketing services will be available to all Bayer Bess clients, including Quaker Oats Co., Helene Curtis Industries, Ameritech and Kemper Property & Casualty Insurance Co.

In announcing the new agency, Mr. Kobs also offered an explanation of his sudden departure last year from Kobs & Draft.

Mr. Kobs said Saatchi had asked that he take over the international division of Kobs & Draft, but instead he offered to buy back the agency's office here, a move approved by Backer Spielvogel Bates but rejected by Saatchi.

After his departure, Mr. Kobs formed IBJ Consulting. The acronym stands for In Between Jobs.#

Cost of TV spot pegged at $145,600

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Advertisers spent an average $145,600 in 1987 to produce a TV spot, and, not surprisingly, soft-drink and fast-food commercials cost more than those for package goods.

These were among the findings of a long-awaited study disclosed last week by the American Association of Advertising Agencies' Committee on Broadcast Production.

The committee obtained data from 22 major agencies on 2,402 spots produced during 1987. A similar study for 1988 costs is now being compiled for July release. Cost studies for 1989 and future years are expected in the second quarter of each year.

The study is designed to lay the groundwork for standardizing comprehensive measurements of production, editing, talent and music costs.

"For a number of years in this atmosphere of escalating production costs, a number of people have done studies," said George Bragg, exec VP-director of broadcast production at Lintas:New York and chairman of the Four A's committee. "But if you ask different people different questions and put in different criteria, the results aren't comparable."

Of the total sample, 1,646 spots—or 68.5%—were 30 seconds long, while 452 (18.8%) were 15 seconds and 134 (5.6%) 60 seconds. The others were of various lengths.

The fast-food restaurants, beer, soft drinks and snacks category proved the most expensive. That was expected, given the high talent and production costs for splashy campaigns from major advertisers such as Coca-Cola USA, Pepsi-Cola Co. and McDonald's Corp.

The average spot produced for national advertisers in that category cost $241,900, a figure that dropped to $229,800 when regional and local advertisers were included.

Toy and recreational advertising was the least expensive to produce: The 62 local, regional and national spots in that category cost an average of $117,500 to produce.

Among exclusively national advertisers, the lowest-cost category was package goods at an average $119,500 (see chart for complete breakdown of commercial costs by product category).

Among other significant findings:

- The average cost of a commercial for a national advertiser was $156,600, or 7.6% higher than the overall norm. A spot for a regional advertiser cost an average $102,200, or 29.8% less than the total average of $145,600, while a spot for a local advertiser cost $56,900, 60.9% below the total average.
- Roughly 65% of all spots in the sample were produced at or below the average costs, so the most expensive 35% of the spots cost enough to disproportionately skew the sample upward.
- The net cost for an average spot payable to a production company based in New York or Los Angeles was $105,800. But the average cost from production companies based elsewhere in the U.S. or in Canada was just $53,000, while the average cost from a foreign-based company was $130,200.
- The average studio shoot cost $64,300 a day, or 15.1% less than the average $75,700 spent on a location shoot. But location shoots usually mean longer days, an average 15 hours compared with 11 in the studio, so the total per-hour cost is more similar.
- Almost 48% of spots in the sample were shot exclusively on a set, while 33% were shot only on location. (The remaining 19% combined location and studio shoots.)
- More than 60% of commercials in the sample contained some type of music, adding an average cost of $7,200 per spot.

Roughly 24% of the total sample included original music, 30% had new arrangements of existing music, 2.4% used existing "famous songs" and 5.5% contained "stock" music.

"Famous songs"—used in 57 of the spots—represented the most expensive subcategory, adding an average $19,800 per commercial to the total production cost.#

British Knights steps up ads

By PAT SLOAN

Athletic-shoe marketer British Knights is hoping its new TV campaign gets off on the right foot.

In fact, "Get off on the right foot" is the theme of the campaign that breaks this month from Chalk & Partners, New York.

The theme will also be used in local promotions dealing with drug use, staying in school and other issues.

The marketer this year is hiking its ad budget 150% to $7.5 million.

British Knights, which was founded just three years ago, had a banner 1988. Sales jumped 186% to $88 million.

"In the past we have been more of a sales-oriented company. Our challenge in 1989 is to get more sophisticated in marketing," said Larry Schwartz, VP-sales and marketing.

With shoes priced at $55 to $80, British Knights competes with the much larger Nike and Reebok International in the $4.3 million athletic-shoe market.

But instead of focusing on all age groups like the larger marketers do, British Knights targets consumers six-to-18 years old, who buy the most shoes and are "open to trying new brands," Mr. Schwartz said.

The brand is well-known in ethnic markets, agency President Howard Chalk said, and has been "picked up in the last year and a half by suburban kids as well."#

Climbing shop profits may slip in '89

By GARY LEVIN

Major publicly held ad agencies showed modest to encouraging earnings growth in 1988, but a decline in the growth of U.S. ad spending is likely to weaken gains for many companies.

Last week, WPP Group and Omnicom Group released 1988 results that were close to analysts' expectations of both holding companies.

As previously reported, Ogilvy Group's earnings exceeded forecasts, though its profit margins remained weaker than similar companies' (AA, Feb. 6). Its $7.5 million headquarters move, set for May 1, will further depress earnings growth.

Interpublic continued its strong financial performance, while Foote, Cone & Belding Communications reported lower earnings on record-high revenues, due mainly to $2.8 million in start-up costs for its international joint venture with France's Publicis.

For many agencies, U.S. revenues fell in the fourth quarter and for the year, while international revenues grew substantially.

Forecasts for 1989 put international ad spending growth at about 12%, double that of projected domestic growth. So shops with stronger overseas networks—such as Interpublic—are better poised for the future.

WPP, completing its first full year with J. Walter Thompson Co. under its wing, posted net income of $37.6 million for 1988, a 216.1% gain, on revenues of $974.7 million, up 104.2%. (These figures are converted from the British pound sterling.)

The company said its operating profit margins rose to 9.5% from 7.5% in 1987, on a comparable basis, due to efficiency gains at several units including JWT and the Hill & Knowlton public relations unit.

WPP said JWT alone gained net billings of $422 million, compared with a $120 million net billings loss in 1987. The entire company added net new-business revenues of more than $144 million, capitalized to net billings gains of $960 million.

Omnicom, parent of PBDO Worldwide, DDB Needham Worldwide and smaller agencies, earned $39.2 million for the year, a 12.7% gain, on commission and fee revenues of $881.3 million, up 8.6%.

For the fourth quarter alone, earnings rose just 3%—compared with 8% or more during the rest of the year—to $15.6 million, on revenues of nearly $248 million, a 0.2% dip.

For the year, Omnicom's international revenues rose 13%, outpacing U.S. growth of 6%, but only a third of the agency's total revenues came from outside the U.S.

Incoming Omnicom CEO Bruce Crawford told analysts last week he expects "modest" revenue growth for 1989, and analysts say that factor will likely inhibit margin improvements, too.

Greg Ostroff of Goldman, Sachs & Co. said Omnicom's "lack of a significant and cohesive international network" will hurt revenue growth just as agencies are increasingly reliant on non-U.S. growth to boost their business.

Mr. Crawford hinted his attention will now focus on non-U.S. acquisitions, with the sales of smaller U.S. shops to their managements now complete.#

ized the regimes of Messrs. Miller and Oliver.

Ms. Steiger is "definitely nonpartisan, and since Ronald Reagan caught so much grief for his partisan appointments, that's probably a pretty good thing," said Bob Brinkman, general counsel to the National Newspaper Association.

American Advertising Federation Senior VP Wally Snyder, a 16-year veteran of the FTC staff, was unfamiliar with Ms. Steiger's postal track record. But he said there are distinct advantages to a non-partisan FTC chief.

Gene Del Polito, executive director of the Third Class Mail Association, lauded Ms. Steiger for her job at the Postal Rate Commission.

"She's been outstanding . . . it would be a terrible loss for the PRC," Mr. Del Polito said. "She has a background in education . . . and an affinity for consumer issues. She's the only PRC chairman I've known of to be strongly supported by Democrats and Republicans."

Mr. Del Polito said Ms. Steiger, a graduate of Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., is intelligent and would be a good bet to mend the FTC's relationship with Congress.

Art Zackler, director of publishing policy development for Time Inc., said Ms. Steiger "came in [to the postal commission] with a positive but modest reputation . . . and has done nothing but enhance it."

He said her congressional hearings "would be a lovefest."

Mr. Zackler said Ms. Steiger could quickly overcome any lack of advertising and consumer protection expertise.

Mr. Snyder agreed. "It seems that at the postal commission she was in a policy role, and I don't feel it's a necessity to have [as FTC chairwoman] a lawyer or an economist," he said.#

Vermont eyes ad tax

MONTPELIER, VT.—A state House committee this week is expected to consider taxing advertising as a means to fund a proposed health insurance plan. It's not known whether the proposal, by Rep. Toby Young (D., Westminster), would tax creative services only or also extend to time and space. The Vermont Advertising Coalition, consisting of the state's adclub and media associations, has been formed to oppose the measure (see related story on Page 76)

Long John, Richards split

LEXINGTON, KY.—Jerrico and the Richards Group, Dallas, have parted company on the Long John Silver's account. Richards had handled the $12 million broadcast creative assignment as well as some media buying since August. MARC Advertising, Pittsburgh, handles most media buying. The only campaign from Richards—which succeeded Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago—was the "Best recipe for seafood" effort launched last month.

Polaroid clicks

Ads expand line's image

By ALISON FAHEY

In a major shift in strategy, Polaroid Corp. this week breaks a $20 million image-building TV campaign for its instant photography products.

Polaroid also is moving ahead with its North American introduction of conventional film. Due this spring, the line will get a major—and separate—TV campaign that gives the film an "extremely unique position," said Gary Moss, Polaroid director of marketing services.

He wouldn't discuss details.

The umbrella advertising now beginning for instant photography is a change from the single-product advertising Polaroid has used since the mid-1970s.

The new campaign, from BBDO Worldwide, New York, illustrates instant photography's business, professional, scientific and consumer uses.

Polaroid sells 60% of its cameras to consumers and 40% for business and professional use, Mr. Moss said.

Four 30-second TV spots, themed "Before it's a memory, it's Polaroid," will break March 15 on network and cable, with spot TV following in the fourth quarter. Each spot will contain several vignettes.

"The campaign's [strategy] is to make people more aware of the multiple uses of instant photography beyond just Suzie's birthday," Mr. Moss said.

"Before it's a memory," it's Hank and fan in this TV spot.

The new approach, he added, "is part of our movement into saying Polaroid is a total imaging company; that's why we're showing other uses of cameras."

For example, in one vignette, a fashion designer uses a Polaroid camera to capture different looks as he creates dress styles.

Another vignette shows a couple at the doctor's office where the pregnant woman gets a sonogram. The couple sees their unborn child in a Polaroid photo for the first time.

"The campaign dramatizes the emotionality of using instant cameras and film," said Glen Gilbert, BBDO management representative.

Other vignettes depict sentimental situa-

Time deal creates Goliath

New ad packages possible

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK—The first impact on advertisers of the Time Inc. and Warner Communications merger may be a new kind of multimedia package combining cable and Time Inc.'s magazines.

Even before the proposed merger, executives at Time Inc. were assembling a package that would have included selling pages in its publications with spot cable ad time through its own American Television & Communications Corp., cable's second-largest multiple system operator.

Once the merger is completed, the combination of the two companies' cable divisions—Warner Cable Communications is the fifth-largest MSO—will create access to about 5.5 million basic cable subscribers.

REGINALD BRACK

"After everything settles down, we will look at the same plan again, but this time we'll have a much larger pie to work with," said Donald Elliman, exec VP-marketing, Time Inc. Magazine Co. "This [merger] gives us a hell of a lot more assets to work with."

Mr. Elliman said it may be months before real ad packages from Time Warner Inc. are formulated, and Reginald Brack, president, Time Inc. Magazine Co., agreed.

"It's too early to speculate on ad packages, but it's logical that as we sell some custom-made packages now, we will have . . . access to markets we were never in before," Mr. Brack said. "Now there are so many more colors

NEW YORK—The proposed $18 billion merger of Time Inc. and Warner Communications is setting the stage for further acquisitions by the new company, possibly including a major TV network.

The stock swap and near-perfect meshing of the two media conglomerates without selling assets would leave the new company with a hefty cash war chest. And if the merger is completed as planned within three to six months, observers believe the prime target of Time Warner Inc. could be CBS Inc.

CBS, which shed its music and publishing operations, could perfectly complement Time Warner, adding network broadcasting operations to what will already be one of the world's largest media concerns.

"If you are looking at trying to create the ultimate vertically integrated media empire in the U.S., the two missing pieces for Time Warner and the most obvious synergies would come from the addition of a broadcast network and a basic cable network," said Larry Gerbrandt, senior analyst at Paul Kagan Associates.

"These companies combined have the cash and borrowing capacity to acquire anything they desire," he said.

British shop fights takeover

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—France's BDDP Group could try to take over the U.K.'s Boase Massimi Pollitt in what would be the ad industry's second hostile takeover attempt.

The first, WPP Group's 1987 acquisition of JWT Group, parent of J. Walter Thompson Co. and Hill & Knowlton, was viewed as a watershed event in the ad business.

"This one [BDDP taking over BMP] would be even more hostile because all of BMP's current managers are opposed to the takeover and all of JWT's weren't," one agency executive said.

BMP, which bought Ammirati & Puris, New York, in 1987 and owns a minority interest in Goodby, Berlin & Silverstein, San Francisco, is the U.K.'s seventh-largest agency. Billings in 1988 were $299.6 million. BDDP billed $462.5 million.

Last week, after BMP turned down a merger offer by BDDP, the French agency announced it had built up a 6.48% stake in BMP and was contemplating making a cash offer that would value the British agency at about $175 million.

In a takeover attempt, the next step would be to make a formal offer and follow it up with a formal document within 28 days. Shareholders would have up to 60 days to accept or reject the offer.

About 20% of the company is controlled by BMP directors and employees. The share price at press time March 10 was 304 pence—above the

JEAN-CLAUDE BOULET

300-pence-per-share level BDDP said it would consider offering.

BMP is expected to announce pretax profits of about $22 million for the fiscal year ending March 31. BDDP made pretax profits of $9.9 million in 1988.

Sources said financing for a BDDP takeover would be arranged by Charterhouse Bank through a consortium of banks. Charterhouse is a merchant bank advising BDDP.

BMP Chairman Martin Boase in a statement angrily dismissed BDDP as "a Parisian agency" that BMP had considered buying but rejected.

"BDDP making a hostile approach for our business indicates how much they need to expand from their rather limited base in Paris and how little they understand BMP, its culture and development," the statement said. "The indicated offer is clearly at a ridiculous level and is totally unwelcome. I urge shareholders not to sell their shares in the light of this frivolous approach."

"We've never been in close negotiations with BDDP," Mr. Boase said in an interview.

The agencies had discussed a minority share swap, Mr. Boase said, but he wrote to BDDP President-CEO Jean-Claude Boulet Jan. 17 to confirm BMP's lack of interest. Mr. Boulet said the agency began buying BMP stock in mid-January.

Mr. Boase said BMP clients are uneasy about the rumors. Statements were expected to be issued by clients last weekend saying they're very unhappy with the possibility of a bid by BDDP.

Big Mac lines up Scrabble players

By SCOTT HUME

After winning with Monopoly twice, McDonald's Corp. this week takes up Scrabble in what's become an annual board-game promotion.

Tie-in partners for the $75 million (in total prizes) Scrabble game are Holiday Inns, Coca-Cola Co., Disneyland and Sears, Roebuck & Co.

$1,000,000 OR OTHER CASH PRIZES
PLUS MILLIONS OF INSTANT WINNER PRIZES!

Network TV teaser spots for the Scrabble game have begun airing, though game pieces won't be given out until March 17.

Sources say McDonald's will spend more than $25 million on network and spot TV and radio advertising for the game. The four tie-in partners will each be spotlighted in at least one commercial in the pool.

Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, is McDonald's agency. Simon Marketing, Los Angeles, created the game; Frankel & Co., Chicago, handles point-of-purchase and merchandising.

For its first-time involvement with McDonald's, Holiday Inns is providing 300 weeklong vacations and 4,110 weekend getaways. The chain values its part in the promotion at $1 million but said McDonald's ad support alone makes participation worthwhile.

"It is fitting into our strategy calling for more higher-profile types of tie-ins," said Steve Pike, Holiday Inns' group director of national marketing. "McDonald's will support this promotion at extremely high [media] weights."

Mr. Pike said Holiday Inns was told that Scrabble had tested higher than Monopoly, which has been McDonald's most successful promotion.

Absent this year from the list of tie-in partners are automakers,

Sears asks FTC for 'mall power'

By KATE FITZGERALD

Sears, Roebuck & Co. is asking the Federal Trade Commission to give the giant retailer the power to decide who it will compete against in shopping malls.

A change could affect Sears strategically and have an impact on many major retailers, including No. 2-ranked K mart Corp. and specialty chains such as The Gap and The Limited.

Sears on March 3 petitioned the FTC to lift a 1977 order that specifically prevents Sears from having veto power over the entry or location of other tenants in malls where Sears is an anchor.

At the same time, Sears is dramatically reducing the presence of its highly touted financial network in its stores nationwide.

Sears plans to halve the number of Dean Witter Reynolds financial services branches in its retail stores and convert all its in-store Coldwell Banker real estate branches into informational and referral booths.

Both moves come as Sears steps up its marketing offensive against discount and specialty retailers. The FTC petition was filed only two days after Sears launched its "everyday low-pricing" positioning.

Sears also continues to add its own "superstore" and specialty-store formats, many of which are in shopping malls (AA, Feb. 27).

In its FTC petition, Sears argues that there have been "dramatic changes in both composition and operation of the shopping center business" and that the 1977 order "severely inhibits the ability of Sears to vigorously compete with entities not under an order."

Sears' petition states: "Suggesting that Sears can have no voice in the selection of major tenants [or anchor-store owners] in a center in which Sears is making a high investment is unrealistic and impractical."

In the petition, Sears says the FTC singled out Sears with the order, which creates "artificially competitive barriers to shopping center par-

Sunkist aims at teens

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Cadbury Schweppes hopes to push its Sunkist Orange soft drink on top again by putting caffeine back in the formula and targeting teens.

By returning to its original formula and emphasizing rock 'n' roll in advertising like it did in the early 1980s, Sunkist plans to regain its lost leadership in the estimated $1.7 billion orange soft-drink market.

Sunkist was the leading orange soft drink in 1982 but lost that status when Coca-Cola Co. and Pepsi-Cola Co. decided to attack with their own orange brands.

Last year, Sunkist ranked as the nation's third-largest orange soft drink, trailing Pepsi's Mandarin Orange Slice and Coca-Cola's Minute Maid Orange. Of the four top-selling orange soft drinks, only Sunkist will contain caffeine.

But Sunkist could get squeezed. Pepsi is relaunching Orange Slice this spring with a reduced-juice formula, new packaging and new radio and TV spots from BBDO Worldwide, New York.

Also, Coca-Cola is heavying up ad and promotional support for Minute Maid Orange with new "Orange Orange" advertising via Lowe Marschalk, plus new promotions for the brand as the official soft drink of the National Basketball Association.

In April, Coca-Cola breaks the "Minute Maid Orange NBA Hawaiian Sweepstakes" with 10-second TV tags. The company has also begun a major fountain push to get its accounts to offer Minute Maid along with Coke, Diet Coke and Sprite.

"Long term, our goal is to make Minute Maid the clear dominant brand in the category," said Georgia Camp, Coca-Cola USA program manager-public relations.

The other factor in the market is Procter & Gamble Co.'s Orange Crush, repackaged last year with stronger graphics. Crush is the No. 4 brand. N W Ayer is its agency.

Although Sunkist won't be bringing back the "Good Vibrations" campaign of the '80s, the company will stress hot sun, beaches and music in both advertising and promotions.

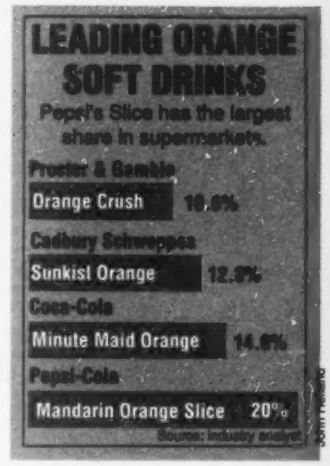
TV spots, filmed in Los Angeles last week via Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, continue the "Drink in the sun" theme line and refreshment angle. They break in early May.

Sunkist has also been given new packaging, making greater use of its orange and blue colors and silver "sun ray" device.

"Sunkist rocks on—Summer Tour '89" is the theme for a wide range of promotions, including a national sweepstakes.

Also, Sunkist is tying in with Musicland Group/Sam Goody Inc. in July with $2 off the purchase of a compact disc, record or tape at Musicland/Sam Goody stores when consumers bring a marked orange tab-top from a Sunkist can.

The offer will be advertised on radio and in print, and promotional materials will be available at the music stores and at supermarkets.



Another promotion employs an unusual vehicle, a glossy, four-page magazine called Sunkist Strip available free at stores with a Sunkist purchase. In a local twist, the store's logo appears on the masthead.

Last year, Sunkist was the first to eliminate its juice content—added in 1985—after recognizing that the trend was waning. Since then, Slice, Minute Maid and others have eliminated or dramatically reduced their juice content.

Sunkist eliminated caffeine from its formula in 1982 because of consumers' health concerns. But research showed that teens prefer Sunkist with caffeine, because it "makes it more impactful," said Ellen Bickerstaff, Sunkist brand manager at Sunkist Soft Drinks, Inc., a Cadbury Schweppes unit.

Sunkist possibly could face another problem. Pepsi recently signed a deal to buy General Cinema Corp.'s Pepsi bottling operation, which bottles a substantial amount of Sunkist. If the deal passes regulatory muster, General Cinema bottlers that now sell Sunkist could switch to Pepsi's Orange Slice.

Ms. Bickerstaff said Sunkist has negotiated with bottlers to allow them to distribute both Sunkist and other orange brands. Realistically, however, bottlers generally market just one brand per flavor.#

DDB's retail unit reaches $115M mark

LOS ANGELES—Wickes Cos.' Builders Emporium, a chain of more that 100 home-improvement stores, chose DDB Needham Retail to handle strategic planning, media planning and creative for its $23 million-plus account.

The business was at JJS Advertising, Santa Monica, Calif. Western International Media continues to place broadcast media.

The new business pushes the 14-month-old retail agency's billings to about $115 million, a point it didn't expect to reach before yearend, said Alan Pando, president-Western region at DDB Needham Worldwide.

The parent agency plans to continue the retail unit's growth by opening offices in Seattle, Chicago and New York.

Mr. Pando said DDB Needham Retail is within 60 days of acquiring retail agencies in Los Angeles and Seattle and is talking to possible acquisition targets in Chicago.

DDB Needham Retail was formed through the January 1988 acquisition of Girvin Conrad & Girvin, Rancho Cordova, Calif. The agency opened a Los Angeles office in March, while the DDB Needham office in Denver added a retail specialty unit with the acquisition of Snyder-Reade in August.#

'88 Olympic Games less than golden

Though 'Flo-Jo' stands out, other Olympians' marketability not as flamboyant

By Scott Donaton
and Anita M. Busch

Life after Seoul turned out to be a disappointment for many top Olympic athletes who expected to cash in on their medals with big product endorsement deals.

Scandals over steroid use and weak network coverage of the Summer Games were cited by sports marketers and athletes' agents as the primary reasons for the drop-off.

Experts laid much of the blame for '88 on Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson, who was stripped of his gold medal and world record after testing positive for banned anabolic steroids. He lost an estimated $10 million in endorsement deals, including a $2.4 million contract with Italian running shoe marketer Diadora.

"The drug situation made advertisers a little conservative about hooking up with athletes," says Nova Lanktree, director of Burns Sports Celebrity Services, Chicago. "Even Matt Biondi's not doing so well, which reinforces the drug theory." Mr. Biondi won seven medals, including five gold, and was not involved in any hint of a drug scandal.

His agent, Parks Brittain, with Advantage International, acknowledges the Olympics "took on a controversial air and that's unfortunate. It hurts people like Matt." But he placed the blame for his client's lack of endorsement deals on factors other than drugs.

"I think the media did the '88 Olympics a strange disservice by coming up within days of the closing ceremonies and saying the Olympics were a dud," says Mr. Brittain.

"Some of it has to do with how the networks covered the Games," says Donald Dixon, president, Howard Marlboro Group Sports, New York. "I think they covered them in a newsy way versus a wave-the-flag way. Biondi is certainly a hero by any measure, but I don't think he was pumped up enough on the networks."

Other sports-marketing experts say the location of the Games, NBC's late-night airing of many events and network coverage contributed heavily to the soft post-Olympic marketplace.

"I don't think the '88 Olympics are as much as a problem as everyone thinks. [1988] Olympic athletes are doing a lot of speaking and get good dollars," says Mr. Dixon. "As 1992 approaches, I think U.S. companies will hire the '88 winners to endorse their product before the start of the Olympic games. And I think you'll see that the total dollar spent will just about equal what it is in '88."

Mike Trainer, agent/lawyer for Andrew Maynard, gold medalist in light heavyweight boxing, says advertisers need to ask themselves, " 'Who's being marketed and what is their future potential?' Some of the Olympians are as hot as they're ever going to be, so they should cash in on it.

"Right now the players that make the endorsement decisions are getting to know [Andrew Maynard]. But [he] did not come out of the Olympics to become a professional speaker. We don't want to do something today that will restrict his marketability tomorrow."

According to Mr. Trainer, "If you're the best you can be, you will excel in the secondary markets: advertising, promotion and appearances." □

From baseball and diving to dealmaking, marketers drive the game behind the scenes

Tennis anyone?

Association of Tennis Professionals hopes to sign a deal with a corporate sponsor before the beginning of its tour in January 1990. It reportedly is talking with Volvo North America Corp. and several other yet-to-be-named corporations. According to Brad Harris, ATP's director of communications, all three TV networks, ESPN and other cablecasters have shown an interest.

Just a fantasy:

"Fantasy Play-By-Play," a radio promotion sponsored last year by Anheuser-Busch that allows Oakland Athletics' fans become baseball announcers for an inning, is moving into other cities. In addition to the A's and the Pittsburgh Pirates, the Seattle Mariners and St. Louis Cardinals have signed up this year, and negotiations are underway with three other teams, according to Fred Greene, president of Greene Creative Services and the gimmick's creator. Mr. Greene says his goal is to have the program in seven markets by the start of the 1989 baseball season and to introduce Fantasy Play-By-Play to the NBA this year.

A Peachy deal for tie-ins:

Atlanta's Peach Bowl is looking for a corporate sponsor. Of the 18 existing college bowl games only the Rose Bowl, which has declined title sponsorship, and the Peach Bowl do not have a corporate sponsor's name attached.

According to Chad Ritchie, senior account exec at Advantage International, the bowl's Atlanta location, community commitment and recently signed three-year contract with ABC-TV are some of the attractions for a potential sponsor.

Fred Greene give Spuds MacKenzie and friends a turn at the mike.

Rent-a-car company takes a dive:

Alamo Rent a Car has signed a three-year, six-figure contract with U.S. Diving Inc. to sponsor the Alamo Challenge and Alamo International.

The Challenge, set for the summer in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Alamo's base city, represents the first time the U.S., Soviet Union and China will meet in a three-way competition. Both diving events, scheduled in May, will be televised by Turner Broadcasting System.

"Diving gives us an excellent marketing opportunity in a cost-effective package," says Charles D. Pratt, Alamo exec VP. "You can't beat title sponsorship, guaranteed television and world-class events in your own backyard."

Take me out of the ballgame:

Fuji Photo Film USA has ended its three-year sponsorship with Major League Baseball, moving its dollars into trade promotions while continuing support of smaller sports endeavors.

"It was very expensive and we believe that our direction of trade promotions will be more useful to us for the dollars spent," says Herb Baer, Fuji manager of PR and special events.

"Saturation in Major League Baseball was a non-issue for us, but I do think in general there are too many events and that the clutter factor reduces the audience awareness of individual sponsors," he says.

Soup's on for Olympian:

Campbell Soup Co. has signed Jill Trenary, U.S. Olympic figure skating silver medalist, as spokeswoman for its red-and-white soup line. The company says Ms. Trenary will appear in commercials, but not until the fall of 1989 or early 1990. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles.

ESPN creates Monster videos:

What do you do with footage of NASCAR races, TNT Monster Trucks and more?

ESPN has turned the canned material into videos, and, with Leonard & Associates has published what it claims is the first catalog of sports videocassettes. The catalog, with about 200 titles, is going to at least a million homes and expects to sell as many as 10,000 units annually. "This isn't just a way to help pay for programming costs," says William Ketcham, ESPN senior VP-network marketing. "We're in it to make money."

Saturation fear has companies leery of getting soaked

Marketers questioning whether sports advertising is worth the cost

By Lynn Berling-Manuel

Advertising on sports programming may be at or near the saturation point. Also, many advertisers believe sports advertising is saturated year-round, according to a 1988 Vitt Media International survey of 102 senior level ad directors at the nation's largest consumer products and services companies.

The saturation perception raises questions on whether or not advertisers feel that sports advertising is cost-effective. In fact, 64% of the ad directors surveyed believed sports advertising has become so saturated that its effectiveness has decreased. The survey also found that because sports advertising has become so expensive, 73% of advertisers doubt its value.

But, according to Hal Katz, Vitt exec VP, "It is very hard to justify most sports-marketing programs against the bottom line. I had a client that as part of a Super Bowl sponsorship got several tickets and took key suppliers. He closed a $2.5 million deal out of that game. How do you measure that?"

The survey points out the Olympics is one mega-event that sponsors and advertisers are eyeing more warily. "It's interesting to note that 3M chose to be an Olympic sponsor last year, but then chose not to do any advertising during Olympic telecasts," says Mr. Katz. On the other hand, Nancy Altenburg, Federal Express' corporate advertising and sports-marketing manager says that Federal Express has withdrawn as an Olympic sponsor but would probably continue advertising.

"There are many changing factors for a company to consider as it approaches sports sponsorships," says Mr. Katz. "The whole system of TV is changing with very large media vehicles giving way to narrower ones, particularly cable." He notes the networks are now being challenged by cable broadcasters like ESPN because national advertisers consider cable a cost-effective ad medium. □

Media's 'big bang'

Three years after Omnicom, media industry braces for mergers

By PATRICK REILLY

The third wave has begun.

Like consumer-product marketers and ad agencies before them, major media companies are headed for unprecedented consolidations among their largest players.

The consolidations, like the Time Inc.-Warner Communications powerhouse forged this month, are motivated by the fear of being left out of a quickly forming top tier of world-class media giants.

The Time-Warner deal, coming virtually on the third anniversary of the "big bang" formation of three major U.S. agencies into Omnicom Group, has stirred talk of a similar scenario rolling through the media business.

That thinking was only encouraged by rumors of more agency mergers last week (see stories on Ogilvy Group and N W Ayer on Page 2, and Boase Massimi Pollitt on Page 74).

"You are going to see a constant stream of [media] acquisition activity and transactions worldwide—it will be unabated," said John Veronis, chairman and co-ceo of Veronis, Suhler & Associates, a media investment banker.

"With [the acquisitions], you'll see significant divestitures," he said. "Time and Warner was one of the best fits that has or can occur, but there are other fits equally as promising."

Media watchers believe no company will be spared, and point to Gannett Co., Tribune Co. and Knight-Ridder as likely candidates to join the consolidation movement, just as reluctant ad agencies are being forced to link up to survive.

Momentum building

The wave is gaining momentum.

Last week, Thomson Newspapers and International Thomson Organisation, both controlled by Toronto's Thomson family, said they'd merge to form Thomson Corp., the world's fourth-largest media company.

The new company—including 192 daily and weekly U.S. and Canadian newspapers, trade publications and electronic information properties—has combined revenues of $4.7 billion and a combined profit of $436 million, based on 1988 results.

"This was a propitious time for us to come together for financial strength and the synergies we could find," said Kenneth Thomson, chairman of the two companies, who will be chairman of Thomson Corp.

"In this case," he explained, "two and two make five. It gives us a good, strong position in the international publishing field. Today, that's an advantage—to be bigger and stronger."

Illustration by Tom Herzberg

Allan Lewis, treasurer of International Thomson Organisation, said the "merger will enhance our ability to make larger acquisitions, which seems to be necessary." He said the new company would pursue acquisitions in the newspaper and publishing industry, largely in the U.S. and Canada.

Thomson's move follows a series of huge media deals, including Australia-based News Corp.'s purchase of Triangle Publications, and its TV Guide, for $2.85 billion, and France's Hachette SA's purchase of Diamandis Communications Inc. for $712 million, both last year.

And there are more to come. Just this month, News Corp. Chairman Rupert Murdoch said he'd participate in creating a new global media company through a worldwide private placement to raise capital. The new company will create a Murdoch war chest for acquiring and developing businesses in the worldwide media and communications industry.

"It's people like Murdoch driving this trend," said Hylton Philipson, president-ceo at Henry Ansbacher Inc., a media investment company. "A handful of global media companies are forming now. If you aren't one of them, it will be difficult as a smaller media company to compete globally."

With the creation of a new super-tier of global media companies, including West Germany's Bertelsmann AG, News Corp., Hachette and others (see chart on Page 75), the question is now whether relatively large independent media companies should seek partners to help them face the new global media world.

"There is a wave of positioning in the global marketplace, and the independents should really consider whether they should go on as independents," Ansbacher's Mr. Philipson said. "Independents have to be thinking whether they should align themselves with someone else for strategic purposes. This is positioning for the next century."

Players in the game

Among the U.S. companies being mentioned as candidates to join the merger game, Gannett Co. was one of several that talked informally to both Time Inc. and Warner before those two began talking in earnest themselves.

The array of media properties owned by Knight-Ridder and Chicago-based Tribune Co. make them potential players.

But Gannett isn't ready to play, said John Curley, the president-ceo who becomes chairman March 31.

"It made sense for Time Warner because they have lines of business that are complementary, but we don't feel the need to go out and find a partner," Mr. Curley said. "If we saw a slowdown in our fields, we might look at other options. But we continue to view Gannett as a growth company and will look for opportunities to acquire and expand in that manner."

Nor does Knight-Ridder see the need for a partner now.

"We see a lot of this empire-building as having a certain ego factor attached to it, but in the end, the merger has to make sense for the shareholders," said Frank Hawkins, VP-corporate relations and planning. "To charge ahead for the sake of being bigger doesn't mean you will necessarily be better. Our ambition is to be among the best, not necessarily among the biggest."

Tribune Co. is making the broadest reach of the three. It recently bought an equity share in The Sunday Correspondent, a Sunday-only national newspaper for the U.K. scheduled to launch this fall.

The Correspondent, a broadsheet, is aimed at the "quality end of the market," said Scott Smith, Tribune VP-finance, who described the company's stake as "relatively modest."

"In the context of Time Warner, it's small, but it's an indication the media business is becoming more global, and it's an opportunity for us to get direct experience in the U.K.," Mr. Smith said.

But Tribune's stake in a British property isn't necessarily a harbinger of a merger in the works.

"We are comfortable as an in-

Ogilvy stock stirs takeover talk

Is Sorrell looking to buy?

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—The takeover rumors that have hounded Ogilvy Group for the past three months have surfaced again.

Last week, Ogilvy's stock took its biggest one-day price jump this year.

The price of a share of common stock shot up $3.75 on March 16, closing at $33.25, just 25¢ short of its one-year high.

More than 419,000 shares were traded, almost six times the average daily volume.

The stock closed March 17 at $33.25, unchanged, on still-heavy volume in a generally depressed trading day.

Ogilvy said it knew of no reason for the stock movement and at press time had no plans for any major announcements. But analysts have been concerned for months that Ogilvy's profit margins are too low.

The strongest takeover rumors continue to involve WPP Chief Executive Martin Sorrell, who couldn't be reached for comment. London-based WPP is said to be interested in adding a second major agency group to its J. Walter Thompson Co. unit as a way to satisfy an obsession to supplant Saatchi & Saatchi Co. as the largest British-owned agency group.

Some sources believe Mr. Sorrell has accumulated less than 5% of Ogilvy's stock. According to U.S. Securities & Exchange Commission rules, investors don't have to declare that small amount of stock in a company.

Such speculation fueled Ogilvy stock runups that began Jan. 9 and surfaced again on Feb. 24. Ogilvy's share price had hovered between $29 and $30 since that last spate of takeover talk died down.

One source said Mr. Sorrell had canceled several meetings here late last week, as well as a trip back to London, and may be closely monitoring Ogilvy stock movements.

Many potential suitors are believed to be waiting to see whether Philip Morris Cos.' Kraft General Foods Group moves the $50 million Maxwell House coffee account out of Ogilvy.

That account is up for review, and a decision is expected next month.

Ogilvy has already lost the Hallmark Cards and Schering-Plough Corp. accounts in the past year. Those two combined represented $60 million in billings.

Kenneth Roman, Ogilvy chairman-ceo, was "attending to client business" and unavailable for comment, said Toni Maloney, senior VP-director of public relations.

In a fit of pique, Ms. Maloney told the Dow Jones News Service she couldn't predict whether an announcement would be forthcoming, and her response—literally, "I'm not a fortuneteller"—was believed to have fueled Wall Street rumors when a variation of the comment moved on the wires.

Analysts attributed the Ogilvy stock runup to a "feeding frenzy" among arbitrageurs,

Ayer rumors: Is there a sale in the works?

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—N W Ayer is on the hot seat.

The oldest U.S. ad agency is the subject of takeover speculation as it faces lingering reports of client problems and a possible management gap left by the expected retirement of Chairman-CEO Louis Hagopian.

The street talk is that an investment banker, believed to be representing Ayer, has approached at least a half-dozen current and former agency executives about playing a management role in a major agency merger.

Some of these executives have worked at Ayer, and observers believe Ayer's status as one of a few remaining large, independent shops makes it the most probable client for this recruiting effort.

Asked whether he's involved in merger negotiations, Mr. Hagopian responded, "Not really," quickly adding, "Not at all. No one has even approached me lately" with an offer to buy the agency.

But the 63-year-old executive is believed to be seeking a buyout of his shares in the privately held shop as he prepares to start a gradual retirement. He's expected to turn over the ceo title to Ayer USA Chairman Jerry Siano at an April 25 board meeting (AA, March 13).

Sale of those shares might pave the way for an effective sale of the agency.

Apple scare spurs ad and PR blitzes

By MARCY MAGIERA and JANET MEYERS

"A" is for Apple, Alar and Advertising. Also, Alarm.

Produce marketers and consumer groups, split on whether pesticide-treated fruits and vegetables are safe for consumption, are pouring millions of dollars into advertising to tell their sides of the story.

The Washington State Apple Commission last week rushed to create a multimedia campaign to control the crisis and reassure consumers that apples—even those treated with the growth regulator Alar—are safe to eat.

The apple commission will spend as much as $3 million, half its annual ad budget, on the campaign that goes into production this week from commission agency McCann-Erickson Worldwide, Seattle.

The group also will borrow $669,000 from local banks to fund a public relations campaign via Hill & Knowlton, Washington and Seattle.

The commission, with support from the International Apple Institute, has spent $1 million on PR and newspaper ads in the past two weeks to rebut warnings made in a recent report from the Natural Resources Defense Council, a non-profit group.

The apple growers' current print ads from McCann carry the headline "Why an apple a day is still healthy advice."

Upcoming ads will target cities where school districts have banned apples from cafeterias and vending machines.

Also responding to the Alar scare with ads are apple products marketers Tree Top and S. Martinelli & Co.

Tree Top last week broke newspaper ads in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and USA Today that showed its apple juice label with the headline: "At Tree Top, 100% pure means 100% safe." The ad will run in 60 markets this week. McCann also is Tree Top's agency.

Martinelli slapped 500,000 "Alar-free" labels on its bottles of apple juice and sparkling cider.

Y&R maintains its lead

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Young & Rubicam turned back a fast-charging Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide to keep its crown as the largest U.S.-based ad agency, according to ADVERTISING AGE.

AA's 45th annual "Advertising Agency Income Report," to be published March 29, will show Y&R with $757.6 million in worldwide gross income on worldwide billings of $5.39 billion in 1988.

Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, reporting $740.5 million in gross income on worldwide billings of $5.04 billion, narrowed Y&R's lead to only $17.1 million, down from a $50.2 million margin in 1987.

Y&R now has ranked No. 1 among U.S. agencies for eight consecutive years.

Among individual foreign agencies, Japan's Dentsu buried the rest of the players with $1.23 billion in gross income, up 39% from 1987. The 14.6% appreciation of the Japanese yen against the dollar accounted for $128 million of that increase. Apart from the dollar conversion, Dentsu had a 21% growth in yen.

Only the agency megagroups, Saatchi & Saatchi Co.—parent to Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising (formerly Saatchi & Saatchi Compton and DFS Dorland Worldwide) and Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide—and Interpublic Group of Cos. notched higher gross income than Dentsu—$1.99 billion and $1.26 billion, respectively.

Returns from international business influenced the major ranking shifts among the top 10 U.S.-based agencies.

McCann-Erickson Worldwide moved to No. 4 from No. 6 in 1987, aided by a 31% growth in gross income abroad.

The newly formed French-American alliance, Publicis-FCB, emerged as No. 5 in the U.S. Its international billings in 1988 were up 37.6% over combined international totals of the two agencies for the previous year.

Both Publicis-FCB and Saatchi are considered dual-headquartered and thus appear on both U.S. and foreign charts.

A complete ranking to be published next week covers 588 U.S.-based agencies and 964 agencies from 67 other countries.#

Vodka on the docks

Importers pour into U.S. market as sales boom

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Four major liquor marketers are diving into the booming imported vodka market, hoping to stir up trouble for Carillon Importers' legendary leader, Absolut.

The new entries most certainly will increase ad spending in the market and could bring about a promotional war for sought-after sponsorships and tie-ins with upscale bars and restaurants.

Unlike other package goods, liquor relies heavily on word-of-mouth prestige often established in trendy watering holes.

Jos. E. Seagram & Sons and Brown-Forman Corp., two of the nation's largest whiskey marketers, and Buckingham Wile Co. are rolling out premium imported vodkas, while the Soviet Union's Stolichnaya hopes to open a new segment with the U.S.' first "ultrapremium" vodka.

Their focus on imported vodka comes as the $450 million market defies all liquor industry trends with phenomenal sales growth.

Last year, imported vodka sales grew about 20% to about 3.5 million cases, as the total liquor market continued its decline, down 2.5% to 140 million cases.

The industry attributes the growth of imported vodka to the popularity of Carillon's Absolut. The San Francisco ad community gets smaller

By ALICE Z. CUNEO

SAN FRANCISCO—The offices of two major national agencies here are closing their doors, further consolidating the city's dwindling ad business into a handful of large shops.

After 24 years in the city, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles is selling its local office to DDB Needham Worldwide. DDB Needham will move to D'Arcy's recently renovated—to the tune of $1 million—office space.

At the same time, Lowe Marschalk is winding down its operations. Negotiations were under way to fold the office into sister agency McCann-Erickson here, but talks appear to have stalled.

At most, only a handful of Lowe Marschalk's 30 employees would be moving to McCann. John MacDaniels, the Lowe Marschalk creative director, is considering opening his own agency.

Both D'Arcy and Lowe Marschalk recently sustained crippling account losses.

In February, D'Arcy, with 26 employees, lost half its billings when Sun Diamond Growers of California moved its $7 million Sun-Maid Growers raisin account to Grey Advertising, Los Angeles, and its $5 million Sunsweet prunes account to J. Walter Thompson USA here (AA, Feb. 20).

Lowe Marschalk lost the $8 million Dep Corp. account, more than a third of its billings, earlier this month to Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif.

While those two have sustained losses, DDB Needham's separate retail group, housed with the general agency, has grown to $100 million-

'Aggressive marketer' to head RJR

AmEx exec picked

By JUDANN DAGNOLI and JUDITH GRAHAM

Louis Gerstner Jr., RJR Nabisco's new ceo, is a business builder.

"He will put the money where the strategic focus is, then he'll run with it," said one of his former colleagues at American Express Co.

The appointment of Mr. Gerstner, 47, formerly president of AmEx, indicates Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. wants to keep the majority of RJR Nabisco's businesses—and keep them competitive—for the long haul.

Kohlberg Kravis, which acquired RJR Nabisco in a $25 billion leveraged buyout, intends to spin off about $6 billion in company assets this year, but it's believed that under Mr. Gerstner, what stays will be nurtured with increased advertising and marketing support.

Those who know him say he's marketing-driven and that he will do everything possible to avoid marketing cutbacks.

"He's a guy who believes in building brands. He's a very aggressive marketer," said Ogilvy Group Chairman-CEO Kenneth Roman, a friend of Mr. Gerstner and head of a key AmEx agency.

Mr. Gerstner's strongest skill is as a strategist. His determination of the long-term strategy for both R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and Nabisco Brands, the company's two main units, will dictate which operations will be sold to help repay Kohlberg Kravis' acquisition debt.

Jerry Welsh, former AmEx exec VP-worldwide marketing and communications and now an independent consultant, said he expects Mr. Gerstner to shake up RJR Nabisco.

"My view is that Lou will come out of the blocks very fast with important marketing moves," Mr. Welsh said.

But where former CEO F. Ross Johnson seemed prone to lightning-quick and perhaps even capricious acts, such as abruptly moving company headquarters to Atlanta from Winston-Salem, N.C., Mr. Gerstner is less rash.

Even though he's been portrayed as an executive with a dynamic management style, he's known to constantly question conventional business methods.

Mr. Gerstner also promotes continual and sometimes jarring change with organizational shuffling.

But he tenaciously held to a long-term strategy at AmEx, and that permeated its every move, sources said.

Most analysts say the probable divestitures are Del Monte fruits and vegetables, snack unit Planters LifeSavers and Chun King frozen foods.

Louis Gerstner Jr., RJR Nabisco's new ceo, held to long-term strategy at American Express.

"Every company that has ever gone private has cut marketing expenditures," said Wertheim Schroder analyst Robert Cummins. But another analyst said that if Mr. Gerstner sells Del Monte, Planters LifeSavers and Chun King, that alone would result in at least $60 million in reduced spending on advertising.

A published report said Kohlberg Kravis had already made up its mind to cut marketing at Nabisco Brands by 10%, or $33 million. But a Kohlberg Kravis spokesman last week said how the debt is repaid is entirely Mr. Gerstner's responsibility.

Analysts disagree about how he will proceed.

PaineWebber analyst Manny Goldman said Mr. Gerstner's first order of business "will be to drop interest expense as quickly as possible," most probably through budget cuts.

But Harry Freeman, exec VP at AmEx, believes Mr. Gerstner will exhaust other possibilities first.

"If he came to the conclusion that costs had to be cut, he's a tough guy and he can do it," Mr. Freeman said. "But he would not be likely to go in and say, 'It's obvious we'll do A, B and C.' He's more likely to say, 'Let's talk about this in depth, and let me think about it.'"

It was Mr. Gerstner who, after an exhausting analysis of AmEx's strategic direction, decided to put Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. on the block. His reasons for selling the insurance company included low market share, little potential for cross-marketing and its lower profitability than other units.

If he uses similar criteria at RJR Nabisco, it's possible that the company's cereal business could go after Del Monte and Chun King. Nabisco's cereals have low market share, even though the unit reportedly is very profitable.

Nabisco's cookie and cracker unit would likely stay under such an analysis.

Mr. Gerstner's focus on imagery at AmEx, where he exploited the name's upscale image, is an apparent fit with RJR Nabisco.

The company's tobacco unit circumvents brand parity with a focus on imagery in cigarette marketing and advertising. Nabisco hones in on the wholesomeness of its products with its signature red-corner logo and three-note musical tag in TV advertising.

Those who know Mr. Gerstner say that though he has an appreciation of marketing, he will likely delegate those duties.

"He's not going to do marketing plans for Oreos," said J. Brendan Ryan, exec VP-managing director at Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, New York.

Mr. Gerstner is familiar with one RJR Nabisco ad agency, McCann-Erickson Worldwide, which handles crackers and also works for AmEx.

There's also speculation that main AmEx agency O&M could angle for some RJR Nabisco business.

Although O&M is now precluded from pitching RJR Nabisco because of its work for Philip Morris Cos.' Kraft General Foods Group, its main account is Maxwell House coffee, and that's under review.

One source said it's possible that if O&M loses Maxwell House, the agency could resign its largely unprofitable overseas General Foods accounts to take on RJR Nabisco.#

Merrill Lynch gets bullish on realism in latest effort

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Merrill Lynch & Co. is bucking the nostalgia tide in a new $20 million-plus corporate image campaign.

The effort, which broke on network TV last weekend, opts for realism rather than sentiment even though it keeps the 1988 theme line, "A tradition of trust." But that's where similarities with last year's creative approach end.

The previous campaign's early 1900s period-piece vignettes of Merrill Lynch's founder have been replaced with four contemporary 30-second spots from Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, New York.

None of the spots use the Frank Capra-derived style of the 1988 campaign that helped spawn other nostalgia-inspired efforts (AA, Feb. 15, 1988).

Instead, the new commercials rely on contrast. In each, tranquil scenes of family life or people enjoying themselves are juxtaposed against a jarring sound track reporting the economic news of the day.

The essential message, said Charles Mangano, Merrill Lynch's VP-corporate staff director for advertising, is that "in this chaos of confusion and information, Merrill Lynch is a firm you can trust to deal with today's turbulent economic environment."

"People still have a lot of questions" in the aftermath of the Oct. 19, 1987, stock market nose dive, Mr. Mangano said. "Things just haven't cleared up the way we thought they would."

The new positioning has meant other changes. For instance, the nation's No. 1 broker this year has discontinued its "Straight talk" commercials, featuring company executives talking about important economic or investment issues, out of a belief that the widely copied format has worn thin.

Both AT&T Co. and Shearson Lehman Hutton copied the format, introduced by Merrill Lynch only two days after the stock market tumbled.

Now the company believes a stronger corporate approach is warranted.

"We're going back to solidifying our position vis-a-vis all our markets," Mr. Mangano said.

Part of the effort involves a more consistent look uniting the company's three advertising divisions—corporate, retail and capital markets.

The company's famous bull, its logo and the "Tradition of trust" theme line will be among the elements used in all ads.

Another new marketing thrust this year centers on Merrill Lynch's sponsorship of a new 5-minute news program on Cable News Network called "Focal Point." The program examines the top news story of the day and premieres today. Merrill Lynch will run a :30 during the show weekdays through yearend.

Print is also undergoing an overhaul. Last year's corporate campaign was packed with information about Merrill Lynch's views of the markets and investment opportunities. The new print ads breaking March 22 highlight the traditional values on which the company has based its positioning.

The first ad, running in The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times and USA Today, will focus on the themes of "integrity, intelligence, strength of resources, and a commitment to clients."

"The whole point of our long-range position is that people want to get back to traditional values, the things in life that are really important," Mr. Mangano said.#

- The following are corrections to the "Special Report" on newspapers (AA, March 6): The chart showing the top 20 Sunday newspapers (P. The chart erroneously reported a drop in circulation. In the chart describing the four largest non-national newspapers without Sunday editions (P. S-13), the circulation figures for Bangor Maine Daily News should have been 1986—78,476 (daily), 93,133 (weekend); 1987—79,271 (d), 95,375 (w); and 1988—80,337 (d), 97,271 (w), per Audit Bureau of Circulations audited figures reported by the newspaper.#

Brewers distill local efforts

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Regional marketing has become a key strategy in the brewing industry's battle for market shares rather than volume growth.

Actor Randy Quaid appears in a Miller Lite campaign airing only in Texas. Chicago Cubs announcer Harry Caray is the "Bud Man" in a Chicago version of a Budweiser campaign. Local scenes of Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Houston and Los Angeles are inserted in national commercials for Coors Light that run in those cities.

"Now that the battle for market share is more intense, some of the national companies are going not so much at their national competitors as at local brands," said Terri Finnegan, editorial director for Modern Brewery Age.

With growth in the total market slowing, brewers are aiming carefully for markets that offer the biggest potential, said Robert Weinberg, a beer marketing consultant at R.S. Weinberg & Associates, St. Louis.

Of the three U.S. brewers who have distributed nationally for the last five years—Anheuser-Busch, Miller Brewing Co., Stroh Brewery Co.—only A-B has held its budget for spot buys at about the same percentage of total ad expenditures. Miller and Stroh increased spot buys.

In 1983, A-B spent 24.3% of its ad budget on spot TV, 24.1% in 1987 and 23.8% in the first nine months of 1988, according to Leading National Advertisers and Broadcast Advertisers Reports. A-B budgets about $120 million for Budweiser advertising.

Miller made spot buys with 24.2% of its estimated $57 million budget last year, up from as little as 16.5% in 1984. Stroh spent 40.7% of its estimated $35 million 1988 ad budget on spot TV, a sharp jump from 23.9% in 1987 and a low of 19.5% in 1985.

Adolph Coors Co., which didn't distribute nationally in 1983, budgeted about $48 million nationally for Coors Light last year, earmarking about 46% for regional buys. Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, handles.

For years, brewers have used spot TV to support national efforts, sometimes targeting ad mixes to local needs. A-B, for instance, heavily advertises Busch beer in Southwest markets, Natural Light in others.

A pivotal exception was A-B's 1986 introduction of Spuds MacKenzie in California and then Texas. What started as a local campaign blossomed into a national phenomenon, sharply bolstering Bud Light's momentum. Because of the success of the Spuds cult—created by DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago—brewers have been more willing to spend for regional campaigns.

California and Texas are especially hot territories, "big and significant," Mr. Weinberg said. In 1987, 21.4 million barrels of beer were sold in California, 14.8 million in Texas, 11.4% and 7.9% of the 187.2 million sold nationwide, he said.

The major players have boosted spot buys significantly in Dallas, Houston, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Miller Lite's 18-month Texas campaign, running since May, features Mr. Quaid promising to throw a "big Texas party" with thousands of free beers. The party, slated for Sept. 2, will be held in conjunction with Special Olympics in Texas. Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York, handles.

A-B, meanwhile, is running localized versions of a TV and radio campaign themed "I'm a Bud man" in Chicago and New York as well as several California and Texas cities via D'Arcy, Masius, Benton & Bowles, St. Louis.#

FOCUS ON MEDIA MERGERS

Media head for 'big bang'

dependent company," Mr. Smith said. "But we watch what others are doing. The trend toward integration is interesting to follow."

While many people believe the acquisitive nature of media empire-builders such as Mr. Murdoch and British media baron Robert Maxwell has driven the wave of mergers, they also question the troubles that bigness brings.

Size problems

Such troubles are similar to those experienced when ad agencies consolidated in the mid-1980s in the midst of Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s massive empire-building period.

In fact, Mr. Murdoch has been compared with the Saatchi brothers in his ability to change the ground rules and send both the agency and media businesses scrambling for mergers out of fear.

Even the rationale for media mergers is similar in many ways to previous agency mergers. Omnicom, which, like the Time-Warner deal, involved the principals exchanging shares, was justified as a response to the pressure to grow quickly.

What was overestimated, however, and what may be similarly trapping the media's urge to merge, is the "synergy" rationale.

For example, even Omnicom's executives admit that some of the synergies promised in the 1986 three-way merger of BBDO International, Doyle Dane Bernbach and Needham Harper Worldwide have yet to be realized.

The business problem for many merged ad agencies, and what could be the case for mergers such as Time Warner, "is that synergies that exist well on paper and philosophically are a lot harder to do when you get to the ego and turf problems involved," said Allen Rosenshine, chairman-ceo of Omnicom's BBDO Worldwide and one of the key engineers of the 1986 deal.

"We have not achieved all the synergies or all of our philosophic hopes," he said. "But, in putting DDB and Needham together, we clearly have a better worldwide agency than they would on their own. We have achieved the dual-network configuration we wanted, while a lot of the other synergies [discussed] may not be achievable. But in the macro sense, we have had a successful phase one."

The synergies media companies envision in cross-continent mergers may be harder still to achieve.

Alan Gottesman, who follows agency and media stocks for Paine-Webber, said, "I don't believe in synergies. The only time synergies work is in a crossword puzzle." He said putting two companies together rarely adds anything beyond mass.

Still, Mr. Gottesman said he expects media companies to continue merging. "People are going to try it until it doesn't work anymore," he said.

Looking to 1992

Other rationales behind the media mergers—such as positioning for a 1992 European boom—look slim. Evidence is growing—even at Time Inc.—that the expected boom, at least in print, may be delayed.

European governments plan to harmonize their regulations by 1992, enabling companies to better treat the region as one huge market.

Before the merger, but more so now, Time Inc. has focused on a number of expansion opportunities in Europe, in part preparing for the increased economic activity that will accompany the breakdown of trade barriers in 1992. But Time Inc. is already learning that "media globalization" won't come easily or quickly.

For example, since the Time-Warner pact was announced, Time Inc. executives have spoken bullishly about the new company's media prospects in Europe. With the help of Hachette, Time Inc. will launch Fortune in Spanish in September to match its existing French- and Italian-language versions, and is negotiating for the launch of German-language Fortune in 1990.

"Match" disappoints

But Time Inc. said its ambitious plan for a pan-European, upscale monthly personality magazine, called Match, are being scaled back by its European partner, Daniel Filipacchi, chairman of Hachette-Filipacchi Group, who said he's shelved plans for Match.

A December test version of Match in five languages met with an uneven response from readers, he said last week.

"It was well-received in France, Spain and Italy. Not so well in West Germany and not at all in England," Mr. Filipacchi said. "We believe that it will work someday. Everyone talks about one Europe, but it's not here yet."

Also last week, the U.K.'s Mr. Maxwell said he'd launch his already delayed pan-European, English-language newspaper, The European, as a weekly this fall, instead of as a daily with a May launch.

Time Inc. is marching on, though, and besides the local-language Fortune editions, it will test special local-language editions of Life. The Life logo had been used on the Match test cover.

But Time Inc.'s efforts to expand Fortune in Europe have been troubled. So far, only the French edition is up and running.

In West Germany, negotiations broke down more than a year ago with Bertelsmann-owned Gruner & Jahr because the company wanted more control over the magazine than Time Inc. was willing to allow, German publishing sources say.

Time Inc. recently approached a West German newspaper, magazine and TV company about jointly publishing a German-language Fortune, and negotiations are continuing.

In Spain, Time Inc. decided to call its magazine Fortuna until the company discovered the government tobacco monopoly Tabacalera had registered the name Fortuna, Spain's leading cigarette brand, in all categories.

Also, prospective partner Hachette—Time's partner in the French Fortune—already owned a rival business magazine called Futuro in Spain.

To make way for Time Inc. and Fortune, Hachette sold Futuro this month to Italian publisher Rizzoli. Futuro promptly decided to preempt its future rival and position itself as a Fortune-like magazine.

Futuro's aggressive new ad campaign, developed in-house, uses the slogan "In Italy, it's called Capital. . . . In the U.S., it's Fortune. . . . In Spain, it's Futuro."

Even Sports Illustrated has had problems in Europe.

"For some of the things we talked about doing, it was going to require us to do too much creative new material," said Sports Illustrated Publisher Donald Barr.

However, he added, "I would hope that [the Time-Warner merger] will assist us in expanding" the magazine in Europe.

"We learned the pan-European idea is hard to manage and 1992 has become a little too magical in people's minds," said Christopher Meigher, exec VP-group publisher at Time Inc. Magazine Co. "We are still in the pan-European race, but maybe the year people should be talking about is 2000."

Programming edge

Where Europe may help the Time-Warner deal is in programming.

"The biggest opportunity [for Time Warner] is to exploit the broadcast revolution," said Don Sperring, Young & Rubicam's media director for the U.K. and Europe.

"One of the key things that will make the new channels successful or not is the quality of the product. The supply of programming is the area to exploit; that's what puts Warner in a strong position here."

As many as 100 new channels are being planned for Europe, with Astra—the new satellite on which Mr. Murdoch began broadcasting Sky Television in February—probably the largest.

U.S. TV companies are interested in owning channels as well as supplying programming for them.

"The real opportunity is if Time Warner gets involved in making TV programs for Europe, combining HBO and Warner's expertise," said Judy Thomas, international media director at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, London. "The field is limitless. The demand for serials and dramas is limitless."

Rules uncertain

However, no one knows yet exactly what the rules will be governing foreign broadcasters as media owners or program suppliers.

The latest negotiations among European Community countries indicate broadcasters will be required to air a majority of European-produced programming "wherever possible" (see related item on Page 8).

Sources said the solution for U.S. companies that want to get into European broadcasting is to take minority stakes with majority European partners for channel ownership and to get involved in co-production in order to compete in the European Community segment of program quotas.

"It will be a major problem for Time Warner how to link through with European broadcasters and production companies on genuine co-production deals," Ms. Thomas said.

For example, "there's nothing to stop new legislation from completely banning Time Warner from any involvement in U.K. television," she said. "They can't stop [Europeans], but they can stop Time Warner."

Maybe the expectations for the globalization of media should also be reassessed.

Mr. Veronis, for one, said he doubts the often-heard scenario that the world will become dominated and controlled by five or six global media giants in the not-too-distant future.

"There won't just be five or six companies dominating the world," he said. "All media companies are driven by the creative process. It's not the province of bigness or smallness; it's the province of creativity." #

Saatchi & Saatchi: What happens next

Photos by Hywel Jones

Maurice Saatchi talks to shareholders after his speech at Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s annual meeting in London.

Major changes in works

By LAUREL WENTZ

It could be several years before Saatchi & Saatchi Co. solves its problems.

Last week the British advertising group stunned its annual meeting with a surprise announcement that 1989 pretax profits would fall below 1988 levels.

A source within Saatchi's U.S. organization said top managers were brought to London before the annual meeting and told to expect two to three years of rough times.

Sources say Saatchi & Saatchi is suffering from deep management problems requiring changes. Those changes include:

- Cutting back on or getting rid of various properties, including some in its consulting arm and ad agency McCaffrey & McCall, New York.
- Tightening financial controls that have been loosened since WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell left his job as Saatchi's group finance director in 1985. It may add a new financial officer.
- Deepening management to oversee businesses that are losing key staff while

Advertisers 'up in arms'

NBC's Tartikoff reacts to mood

By WAYNE WALLEY

The "New Puritanism," an attitude of consumers that network TV has gotten too lenient in its treatment of sex and violence, is starting to hit advertiser, agency and network TV executives hard.

There are even signs that the "New Puritanism" may affect the crucial upfront market, when advertisers buy time in network shows for the fourth quarter and first three quarters of the following year.

Since Terry Rakolta, a Michigan woman, made headlines a month ago by calling for advertisers to pull commercials off Fox Broadcasting Co.'s "Married . . . With Children," the repercussions have mushroomed.

Just last week, Chrysler Corp. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. pulled spots from NBC's "Nightingales" series after the American Nurses' Association mounted a massive letter-writing campaign against advertisers.

In a similar move, Mennen Co. pulled its commercials from "thirtysomething."

NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff, reacting to stinging criticisms about programming from consumers and advertisers, announced last week he's beefing up the network's broadcast standards operation. He named sociologist Rosalyn Weinman to the new post of VP-program standards and community relations.

It was only last year that the network cut back its standards unit.

ABC and CBS haven't been hit as hard by consumer and advertiser complaints, even though they, too, have cut standards staff.

"I do think there is a shift in audience taste, and we'd be foolish not to listen to that feedback," Mr. Tartikoff said at a news conference following the network's program development presentation last week to advertiser and agency executives.

"Any time you experiment or try to push the boundaries of what's acceptable, you're going to find sometimes you push too far," he said. "We're not in the business of pushing boundaries. It would be a frivolous enterprise to be pushing the boundaries back when the audience is saying, 'I can't watch this with my family because it's on at 9 p.m. and my 11-year-old is still up.' "

NBC and the other networks may end up paying for their mistakes in the upfront season. Advertisers may rebel against lenient network programming standards by withholding ad support from certain shows in the advance-sales period, sources say.

Agency executives, many of whom screened network shows in development in Los Angeles last week, acknowledged some clients are "up in arms" over what they perceive to be offensive programming.

Some advertisers are instructing agencies to "find other alternatives" if network programming is "the same as this year," sources say.

"There's going to be some reluctance to commit to any shows that look potentially offensive in any way, and in those shows the units may go at any price," said Michael Drexler, exec VP at Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, New York.

Illustration by Christopher S. Tulcan

But if buyers avoid new shows and concentrate on existing series, it could also drive up prices for the tried-and-true network offerings.

"I don't think the networks are going to be significantly hurt in terms of ad revenues overall [in upfront], but there is the possibility some shows will not get advertiser support to the extent the networks want," Mr. Drexler said.

"We're probably going to have to build in

Ogilvy pares its holdings

By GARY LEVIN

New York — Ogilvy Group is trying to spiff itself up for Wall Street.

The holding company last week shed Rolf Werner Rosenthal Inc., a $60 million pharmaceutical agency, in a move to strip away non-core businesses and focus on the bottom line.

The shop was sold to Nelson Cos., headed by Wayne Nelson, a former Johnson & Johnson executive committee member credited with building the Tylenol brand.

Ogilvy is also negotiating to sell the language-management arm of its Euramerica International unit, which has total billings of $50 million and estimated revenues of $7.5 million.

Yuri Radzievsky, Euramerica chairman-recconfirmed Ogilvy is negotiating to sell the language-management arm, including translation services, to Macmillan's Berlitz unit.

Ogilvy officials declined comment, but securities analysts and investors have been invited to a March 29 meeting at Ogilvy to discuss the company's future strategy.

If the Macmillan deal goes through, Euramerica's ad business would be folded into Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide. No other bidders have surfaced, Mr. Radzievsky said, and if a part of the agency isn't sold, "my guess is it would continue in its present form."

Among other measures aimed at streamlining or refocusing its businesses:

- Ogilvy plans to sell a larger stake in Scali, McCabe, Sloves to Scali management while retaining a minority interest (AA, Dec. 26, et seq.).

Progress on that front is "slow but sure," an agency official said, adding that a deal is expected sometime this year. Scali management already owns 20% and has options to buy another 10% by next year.

- Ogilvy & Mather has trimmed what it considers to be redundant multiple offices in foreign countries. In recent months, it has reduced the number of offices in Australia, West Germany and the Netherlands.

But foreign growth has been strong for the agency, and Ogilvy is committed to expanding its foreign business in general. The company is particularly intent on rebuilding a presence in Japan, where it has withdrawn twice before.

- SAGE Worldwide and Research International, two proprietary research and consulting companies that are key to Ogilvy's marketing-services lineup, have been streamlined and bolstered.

In a restructuring, Ogilvy combined its retail consulting and promotional marketing businesses into twin business units under the SAGE umbrella, headed by Executive Director Spencer Hapoienu. To London-based Research International Ogilvy added Decisions Center, a $16 million research company, and a 20% interest in the Futures Group, following a management-led buyback at that company.

Analysts and investors generally applaud these measures and expect them to help alleviate recurring problems of lackluster earnings performance and vulnerability to an unwanted takeover.

Sharp run-ups in the public company's stock price this year have prompted speculation that just such an offer is in the works.

After the latest such run-up, which boosted Ogilvy's share price $3.75 to $33.25 on March 16, the stock eased back to $32.13 on active trading when the market closed March 23.

"Anything they do to upgrade their portfolio and to focus their business more is a positive," said Greg Ostroff, analyst at Goldman, Sachs & Co.

"I suspect [the sales] are to improve returns

Campbell looks to Tracy-Locke

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Campbell Soup Co. has turned to Tracy-Locke, Los Angeles, to create a test commercial for its red-and-white label soups, bypassing regular agency Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York.

Campbell said the test doesn't mean the $40 million soup account will be moved from Backer.

"It's a special assignment and a one-time thing," said Paul Mulcahy, Campbell VP-advertising. "It doesn't mean we're changing agencies."

The test spot, filmed in California last month, starts airing this week in Philadelphia and Portland, Maine.

Still, sources say Campbell has been disenchanted with Backer's work on soups for some time. In particular, the company was annoyed by the agency's resistance to a recent change in campaigns, when the ad theme was switched to "M'm m'm good" from "Soup is good food."

Campbell isn't "deliriously happy," said a source, noting that soup sales volume is down 1% this year.

Sources say impatience with Backer is growing, particularly since Campbell USA President Herb Baum began running the soup group. Dan Santangelo, who'd been in charge of the soup group, has been on extended leave, attending an Advanced Management Program at the Harvard Business School.

In an earlier interview last week, Mr. Baum admitted that some of the creative work for red-and-white soups wasn't up to snuff, despite the campaign change. But he added that Backer wasn't in trouble.

Mr. Baum said he's working more closely on red-and-white soups with upper-level creatives at Backer to improve the advertising.

Mr. Mulcahy said the assignment for the test spot went to Tracy-Locke via Phil Slott, agency chairman-chief creative officer, because the commercial is an experiment in semiotics, or symbolism in commercials.

He said Mr. Slott and executives at Tracy-Locke's sister agency, BBDO Worldwide, have more experience in semiotics.

BBDO and Tracy-Locke are units of Omnicom Group.

Mr. Baum likened his efforts in working with Backer to last year's arrangement with BBDO New York Chairman Phil Dusenberry that resulted in the very successful Jimmy Stewart campaign for Home Cookin' soups. BBDO handles Home Cookin' and Chunky soups. #

TV magazines brace for battle

By PATRICK REILLY

Cable and TV magazines are fighting hard to win advertisers, cable system operators and readers at a time when cable TV's audience penetration is continuing to rise.

On April 1, Crosby Vandenburgh Group will fold two smaller cable magazines, Cabletime and Choice, into the new, 5 million-circulation TV Entertainment Monthly. The full-size magazine and program guide is a historic departure from digest-size competitors Cable Guide and TV Guide.

A color page in TV Entertainment is $56,150, a b&w page is $43,350 and a b&w page within the program listings is $36,000.

Others in the field are contemplating changing to a format like TV Entertainment.

Rupert Murdoch's TV Guide for the first time studied the cost of producing the 37-year-old weekly as a full-size magazine, though the idea now appears to be shelved.

At the same time, TVSM is testing its monthly Cable Guide as a weekly and at full size, and could relaunch it in the new format by early 1990.

Why all the stir?

Cable and TV magazines are becoming more valuable marketing vehicles than ever before as cable penetration increases and the Big 3 networks and cable services compete for viewers. As of November, cable reached 48.6 million U.S. households, or 53.8% of those households with TVs.

Trucks push Chevy ad recall up

By SCOTT HUME

It's winter. The Super Bowl's over. You think about maybe hopping in the car and getting a burger and a soft drink.

Maybe that's why the five advertisers that had the best recall in February were, in order, McDonald's Corp., Chevrolet, Pepsi-Cola, Coca-Cola and Ford. Fun products.

Chevrolet logged the most surprising showing for the month. While its advertising is nearly always among the top 10 in top-of-mind recall, Chevy placed second in February (tied with brand Pepsi), its best showing ever in unaided awareness.

When respondents to ADVERTISING AGE's monthly adWatch survey were asked to name the first car or truck advertiser that came to mind, Chevy came out on top.

That broke Ford's hold on the top spot in the car category, unchallenged for more than five years of monthly surveys.

So what happened? Did consumers suddenly notice and start humming Chevy's "Heartbeat of America" jingle after hearing it for several years?

Perhaps, but what put Chevy in the driver's seat may have been the advertising for its trucks rather than its cars. Chevrolet has been promoting its truck line in comparative spots with Ford trucks, putting the vehicles through some grueling tests like climbing impossibly steep hills and driving over ditches.

In the midst of winter, such stunts function as memorable entertainment.

The pitch has been effective enough that Ford in March changed advertising for its trucks to mention competitor Chevy by name (AA, March 6).

What lifted Chevrolet to the top spot in the "car or truck" category was very strong recall in the Southeast, where truck sales are highest. Chevrolet was also tops in the North Central area. In the West and Northeast, Ford was the best-recalled auto and truck maker.

While Ford has dominated the car or truck category, Coca-Cola and Pepsi-Cola have taken turns as best-recalled soft-drink ads.

In February, it was brand Pepsi's advertising that was on top, with 37.6% of first mentions. Brand Coca-Cola was named first by 32.5%, down 4.2 percentage points from its January showing.

But the news in the category is Diet Coke.

Advertising that broke in January claims the "Move is on" to Diet Coke and away from Pepsi, an assertion that Pepsi-Cola Co. howled about to the Big 3 networks (AA, Jan. 30).

The centerpiece of the Diet Coke campaign was the 3-D commercial during halftime at the Super Bowl. Consumers may not have gotten the full 3-D effect, but they remembered the effort.

Diet Coke got 9.3% of first mentions when respondents were asked to recall soft-drink ads. That was the product's best showing ever in the soft-drink category in terms of percentage. The campaign was best recalled among consumers ages 25 to 34.

AdWatch is a joint project of AD AGE and the Gallup Organization. Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the first advertising that came to mind from all seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by phone. The margin of error is 3.1%.

Among other changes last month:

- Just when it seemed McDonald's couldn't dominate the fast-food category any more thoroughly, it has done just that. In February, McDonald's advertising was named first by 55.9% of respondents, up 2.7 percentage points from its record 53.2% share in January.

Burger King Corp. continued to redefine the term "distant second," last month garnering 12.4% of first mentions. Wendy's International was third with a 5.4% share.

- Apple Computer held onto its traditional position atop the computer category with 34.8% of first mentions, vs. 34.6% in January. But its only real rival for the top spot, IBM Corp., dropped to a 20.5% share last month from 24.8% in January.

Radio Shack was third with 2.9%.

- E&J Gallo Winery logged a surprising post-holiday surge in advertising awareness in the wine category. Last month, its ads came to mind first for 23.1% of the sample, up a whopping 8.1 points from January.

Banfi Vintners' Riunite dropped to a 5.9% share from 9.7% the previous month but held on to the No. 2 spot.

Gallo's Bartles & Jaymes wine coolers were third with 3.2% of first mentions. #

H.J. Heinz Co.'s Weight Watchers unit said jumped 47% in sales last year.

Weight Watchers is introducing a Peanut Butter Fudge Bar. An estimated $5 million network TV campaign, starring spokeswoman Lynn Redgrave, will support, starting in May. Ally & Gargano is handling.

Also entering the segment is Mars Inc.'s DoveBar International. Although the company wouldn't discuss its plans, it's rolling out new Dove Light next month.

The line extension will have one-third fewer calories and 40% less fat than regular Dove Bar. Grey is the agency.

Nostalgic brands, such as Drumstick and Eskimo Pie, are also experiencing a resurgence.

There's a "tremendous shift back to the basics—the cup, the ice cream sandwich and the pie—and away from the trendy complex products," said George Murphy, VP-marketing at Eskimo Pie Corp.

Eskimo Pie this year will introduce more sugar-free items, including a fudge bar, an ice cream sandwich and a new, milk chocolate version of its Eskimo Pie.

The new products will be supported by spot TV commercials from Hawley Martin Partners, Richmond, Va.

Drumstick has completed national distribution of eight flavored varieties of its Drumstick novelties. The company breaks its first national ad campaign in April.

The $4.5 million network TV and national print effort was created by Fahlgren & Swink, Columbus, Ohio. It's themed "Eight ways to sundae."

For the entire frozen novelties category, Leading National Advertisers' spending figures show a plunge in measured media spending to $33 million for the nine months ended September 1988 from $64 million for all of 1987.#

Global ad volume soars for top 500

Y&R stays on top despite solid run by Saatchi

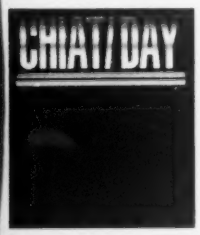
Young & Rubicam held fast to its crown as the largest U.S.-based ad agency despite a strong bid by Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide to overtake the perennial leader, according to ADVERTISING AGE's 45th annual Advertising Agency Income Report.

Composite returns of the AD AGE 500—the top 500 agencies in the report—showed advertising growth in the U.S. returning to more robust levels last year. U.S. gross income for the top 500 produced a 9.8% gain—to $6.8 billion—and, in billings, a gain of 12.4%—to $48.3 billion. Both U.S. gross income and billings in 1987 had fallen about 4% from the prior year.



Agency of the Year and International Agency of the Year appear on Pages 4 and 5.

Worldwide gross income grew to $11.2 billion on billings of $78 billion, up 16.9% and 18.7%, respectively, for the AD AGE 500.

Y&R, which claimed the No. 1 position for the eighth consecutive year, accounted for about 7% of the 500's worldwide gross income and billings. The agency reported $757.6 million in worldwide gross income on worldwide billings of $5.39 billion in 1988.

Had fast-closing Saatchi & Saatchi won one more major account it might have replaced Y&R. As it was, Saatchi's gross income of $740 million on billings of $5.05 billion cut the Y&R margin to $17.1 million from a spread of $50.2 million in gross income a year ago.

Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, Saatchi's sister agency in the Saatchi & Saatchi PLC group, took the No. 3 slot in worldwide gross income with $689.8 million.

Returns from these two huge Saatchi agencies, when added to the holding company's third U.S. agency, AC&R Advertising (No. 30), enabled London-based Saatchi & Saatchi PLC to emerge as the world's largest mega-group. Its worldwide gross income of $2 billion on $13.5 billion in billings, outdistanced Inter-

No. 1 Dentsu hits lofty $1.2 billion in gross income

By Julie Skur Hill

Dentsu Inc. easily retained its "world's largest agency" title in 1988 as its gross income broke the $1 billion barrier.

According to AD AGE's 27th annual foreign agency income survey that included 945 agencies from 67 countries this year, the continuing fall of the U.S. dollar against major currencies helped agencies based in Japan, France and the U.K. hold down their U.S. competitors.

Perhaps Tokyo-based Dentsu and the other Japanese agencies benefited the most from the weakening dollar.

Dentsu '88 gross income leaped 38.9% from 1987, bringing the figure to more than $1.2 billion from $885 million. Its '88 billings grew a hefty 39.5% to $9.5 billion from the previous year's $6.8 billion.

Billings at Dentsu, which has significant holdings in non-advertising businesses, include some of its below-the-line activities.

Included in the billings figures are: equity in multicultural agency HDM; 49% stake in Lucerne, Switzerland-based sports marketing agency ISL Marketing; Dentsu's 12 overseas offices; and activities in printing, public relations, direct marketing, exhibitions, expositions and market research.

Earnings from Dentsu's large holdings in real estate are not included in its billings.

Growth at No. 2 Young & Rubicam—the top ranking U.S. agency—pales in comparison to Dentsu. Y&R's 1988 gross income reached $757.6 million, up 3.1% over 1987's $735 million, while billings grew 9.9% to $5.4 billion from $4.9 billion in 1987.

As the historical grudge match continues, the gap in gross income between Dentsu and Y&R has more than tripled from $145 million in '87 to $471 million in '88—or slightly more than the '88 gross income of No. 12 Grey Advertising.

The dollar's tumultuous ride throughout the 1980s has tipped the advantage back and forth between the Japanese and U.S. agency giants. Y&R last held claim to the No. 1 spot in 1985, when the dollar was strong and Dentsu was held down to the No. 3 position. Dentsu claimed the No. 1 spot from 1973 to 1983, while the dollar was relatively weak.

Total gross income for the top 50 worldwide agencies hit $12.8 billion, up 20.3% from $10.6 billion for those same agencies in 1987. Billings reached $90.1 billion, up 21.7% from $74 billion in 1987. During 1988, the top 50's average gross income grew 25%, while average public Group of Cos., with $1.3 billion in gross income and $8.4 billion in billings.

Interpublic, having narrowed the billings gap by about $3 billion when media advertising-only billings are counted, received a strong performance from its lead agency in 1988. McCann-Erickson Worldwide (No. 4). McCann's worldwide gross income of $656.8 million and billings of $4.4 billion each rose a dramatic 28% from 1987.

But the most dramatic surge among the top 10 came from the merger of Foote Cone & Belding Communications and Publicis Communications, the French agency. The union, called an alliance, produced FCB-Publicis and a No. 5 ranking. FCB had ranked 13th in 1987. (See story on Page 84)

The FCB-Publicis rise affected the rankings of the other top 10 nesters. No. 6 Ogilvy & Mather dropped a notch as did No. 8 J. Walter Thompson Co. and No. 9 Lintas: Worldwide. BBDO Worldwide fell from No. 4 in 1987 to No. 7 and Grey Advertising bumped Leo Burnett Co. from the 10th spot. Burnett fell to No. 12, despite steady growth of 16% in worldwide gross income—an indication of the growth that took place among the top agencies.

Mergers

Mergers were a catalyst for major ranking swings among the top 100, and generally a byproduct of problems facing the corporate culture of the world's mega-holding companies. Problems range from client conflicts created by merged units to the need to pool billings among agency units to give them more clout and make them more competitive.

Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, No. 24, is a product of the merger of Della Femina, Travisano & Partners (No. 39 in 1987) and HBM/Creamer (No. 32 in '87) within British holding company, WCRS Group PLC.

Campbell-Mithun-Esty, No. 20, is the union of Campbell-Mithun (No. 23 in 1987) and William Esty Co. (No. 38 in '87) within the Saatchi & Saatchi PLC umbrella. Rapp Collins Marcoa, No. 51, is the amalgam of Rapp & Collins USA (No. 72 in 1987) and MARCOA DR Group (No. 60 in '87) in the Omnicom Group.

CCG/TCA, No. 69, is the result of the merger in 1988 of Ted Colangelo Associates (No. 97), owned by No. 11 D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, with Connecticut Consulting Group.

Newcomers to the top 100 had a decidedly regional flair. They were No. 73 Gardner Advertising, WRG's St. Louis subsidiary, whose returns were broken out for the first time; No. 80 M E D Communications, Woodridge, N.J.; No. 86 Baver Bess Vanderwarker, Chicago; No. 91 Klemtner Advertising, New York; No. 93 Long, Haymes & Carr, Winston-Salem, N.C.; No. 97 Rumrill-Hoyt, Rochester, N.Y.; No. 99 Gross Townsend Frank Hoffman, New York, and No. 100, Mojo U.S.A, San Francisco.

Billings growth

The 12.4% increase in U.S. billings for the Ad Age 500 was more than matched by returns from foreign operations that totalled $4.4 billion in gross income and $29.7 billion in billings, both up about 30% from the prior year.

Foreign contributions were lifted by a weak dollar in some of the bigger ad markets.

Foreign billings among the 500 are virtually left to the top 25 agencies, and for the first time they recorded higher gross income from foreign operations than from domestic. Foreign gross income from this group rose 31.5% to $4.39 billion, compared with domestic income of $4.3 billion, up 23.3%.

Media

Of total U.S. billings of $48.3 billion for the Ad Age 500, some $35 billion is identified as commissionable media. Media totals demonstrate the power wielded by the 500. Of the four major media, this group accounted for 89% of the national spending in newspapers, 73% of spending in consumer magazines, 50% of spot TV, and virtually all of network TV.

Network TV for the 500 grabbed 27.9% or $9.7 billion of total media billings. Leo Burnett, No. 12, having directed 45.4% of its total volume, or $703.6 million, into network TV, could claim the top spot among agencies using network. J. Walter Thompson Co., No. 8, and Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising were close behind with expenditures of $699.4 million and $698.4 million, respectively.

In spot TV, with 21% or $7.3 billion of total media billings, Y&R topped all spot TV spenders with $391 million, or 20.2% of Y&R's media spending total.

Consumer magazines received $4.4 billion or 12.6% of the 500's media pie, with Y&R taking the biggest piece—$248.5 million. The 500 spent $3.2 billion in newspapers, 9.2% of their media billings. JWT laid out $194 million as the top newspaper spender.

Regional activity

As usual, New York showed its ad muscle, claiming 43.6% of all U.S. billings of the 500. The 169 agencies reporting from New York accounted for $21.1 billion in total billings, up 9.7% from the prior year. Chicago, with 80 shops reporting, retained the No. 2 spot with $5.9 billion. Los Angeles finished third with $3.3 billion, but had to fight off Detroit where aggregate billings of $3.1 billion increased 18.1% from 1987.

The ad climate was moderate to strong in most of the top 10 markets, except in No. 5 San Francisco where billings growth was only 0.8%; in No. 9 Philadelphia, 4.2%, and in No. 10 Cleveland, 4.5%. The smallest increase for the rest of the top 10 markets was 8.3%, for No. 7 Minneapolis.

Employment/productivity

Growth in billings also was accompanied by an upward swing in employment. The 500 list went from 2.6% growth in 1987 to 3.3% in '88 in the U.S., representing 2,368 more jobs. The number of U.S. advertising shops among these agencies increased to 1,192, up from 1,159 in 1987. With billings advancing at a faster clip than employment, ad productivity of the top 100 took a decidedly upward turn. It took an average of 1.55 employees to service $1 million in billings in 1988, compared with a 1.63 employee level in 1987.

Methodology to ranking

The practice of allowing agencies to "double-dip" their subsidiaries makes compilations hazardous from the editor's end, and perhaps confusing to the reader.

Double-dipping is a tradition permitting parent advertising agencies to include the billings and income of subsidiaries in the parent totals by which agencies are ranked. Also, the subsidiaries are ranked based on their own lesser totals, in the same ranking as the parent.

In pulling totals, averages or other analytical data from the mound of information available in this issue, double-dipped subsidiaries must be marked so totals won't be counted twice—once in the parent totals, and separately as a subsidiary.

This can be confusing given the fact that all subsidiaries are not double-dipped for various reasons; some are double-dipped in the current year but not in the prior year, and some, like Rapp Collins Marcoa, have only a portion of their totals folded into the parent—in this case one-half each into BBDO Worldwide and DDB Needham Worldwide.

The following methodologies were used in preparing the tables, charts and totals for this issue.

Gross income ranking

The main ranking in this issue contains 588 agencies. With the top 100 agencies, if an agency is double dipped, it will have its parent agency's name in parentheses following its name. If a top 100 agency is an obvious subsidiary but does not contain the parent in parentheses, it was not reported in the parent's consolidated totals.

For example, Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver is a subsidiary of Grey Advertising but it does not have (Grey) after its name. This indicates LHS&B is not carried in Grey totals.

These parent companies are not to be confused with agency mega groups covered on Pages 80 and 81.

The following table lists parents' initials, the full name by which the parent is ranked, and any of its subsidiaries ranked in this issue and consolidated in its totals.

Billed media rankings

Although media totals in parent agency profiles list consolidated billings by media, rankings by media category on Page 83 do not.

In the media charts, subsidiaries listed above are subtracted from the parent companies' billings in that medium.

This policy exists because the tables—which list only the top 10 agencies in each media category—would be unnecessarily repetitious if the parent were allowed to fold in billings of its subsidiaries.

For example, Bernard Hodes Group is ranked second in newspaper billings. A double-dipped table would have ranked both Hodes and its parent, DDB Needham Worldwide, on the chart. This would have unfairly excluded tenth ranked Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, from the chart.

This policy does present problems. Some subsidiaries report media billings to their parent company differently than they are reported to AA. Sometimes direct response billings are reported to the parent company as capitalized fees and to AA as media billed, or vice versa. Newspaper and magazine categories often contain some or all of farm, business and medical publication billings in either parent or subsidiary.

Also, spot, network, cable and syndicated TV billings are sometimes combined.

In all cases, subsidiaries are given the full benefit of media billings reported.

Although this process is not undertaken to penalize parent companies, parent media billings must reflect the aggregate of all media billed by subsidiaries if the agency reports consolidated billings. As such, parent companies bear the full responsibility of subsidiary reporting. Parent companies which include the billings of subsidiaries are expected to reflect subsidiary totals within the parent's composite media totals.

Retrospective figures

The "Five-year gross income and billings review" and the "AA 500 Index" contain totals from 1984 to present, for the top 25, top 100 and top 500. In both charts, all figures are historic, meaning all figures are for the year in which they were reported. The AA 500 for 1988 is not the same group of agencies as the AA 500 for 1987.

In all cases in this issue, previous years' totals are historical unless otherwise noted. This is done for comparison purposes for individual agencies. Where agencies have been acquired within the last year, 1987 totals represent the parent agency's historical figures as if it owned the agency during the entire previous year.

AA's reference to the top 25 agencies refers to those ranked by gross income on Page 8. However, totals representing the top 25, top 100 and top 500 are all undouble-dipped. All subsidiaries have been subtracted.

This allows AA to maintain a constant top 25 agencies without double-dipping No. 22 Ogilvy & Mather Direct Response with parent, No. 6 Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, for example.

Key to profile information

Data in agency profiles was obtained from agencies that received and completed a questionnaire prepared by ADVERTISING AGE.

Agencies were asked to provide gross income and total volume, the latter identified as the sum of media billings, billings to the client for materials and services and capitalized fees—a method of equating fees to billings by treating the raw fee as if it were the 15% commission the agency earned by billing an amount 6.67 times the raw fee.

Gross income in the traditional agency structure is the sum of the 15% commission earned from the media billings, the markup (usually 17.65%) for materials and services billed the client, and the raw fee. Where the agency profile states gross income as an estimate, it was provided by ADVERTISING AGE.

AD AGE again provided a geographic breakout of agency billings. When agencies did not comply with this request made in the questionnaire, their regional billings were estimated whenever possible and they were contacted about the estimates.

This year marked the fifth year in which agencies provided verification from an independent accountant for figures they reported. Those agencies providing a signature were noted in this issue by a check mark by their ranking beginning on Page 8 and a check mark in the box above the profile for the top 100 agencies.

Compliance has improved measurability. Five years ago, one-third of the agencies complied; this year ADVERTISING AGE achieved 64.6% compliance.

The statement of verification follows:

The undersigned, acting as outside accountant for the agency, confirms that the U.S. income figure indicated above for the year 1988 reflects totals as entered on the books of the company for the period reported.

Several variations of this statement were accepted including a more formal letter written in 1984 by the New York State Society of CPAs under the direction of Gene F. Gaughan, chairman of the advertising committee of the society.

Annual Review

This joint agency of AC&R Advertising and Cochrane Chase Livingston had a combined total billings decrease of 2.9%. Major new business came from Austin Rover of North America ($30 million annualized); Fosters Lager Beer ($25 million) and Regency Cruises ($3 million) along with increased spending from Estée Lauder, Footlocker and Tri-Star. But gains could not outweigh losses from the departing Kinney Shoe Corp. ($13.5 million annualized), NBC Entertainment ($25 million), Paramount Pictures ($7 million) and Matchbox USA ($12 million). The agency projects a 5% increase in billings for 1989. AC&R, the renamed shop that existed in 1987 as AC&R/DHB & Bess (a combo of various Backer Spielvogel Bates units), bought CCL from Saatchi & Saatchi Worldwide to form an independent agency within Saatchi & Saatchi PLC that is connected with neither BSB or S&SW. In the merger, the three CCL West Coast offices were merged into AC&R's three California offices.

Readers' guide to agency profiles

Pretty Good Agency, headquartered in New York, may have answered a questionnaire sent to it by Ad Age in late December. If the editors had not heard from Pretty Good by the questionnaire filing deadline in late January, a second mailing was send. If there was still no response and Pretty Good had gross income of $5 million or more in the prior year, the agency was telephoned for a response.

(✓) This character in the boxtop means an independent accountant verified the figures supplied by Pretty Good. See Page 6 for more information.

■ U.S. volume stats: This segment shows the sources of Pretty Good's compensation—commissionable media, materials and services and capitalized fees. The breakdown is provided in dollars ($000,000).

■ Gross income: Pretty Good and other agencies are ranked by worldwide gross income, which gives a better indication of their size than billings. Gross income generally is the sum of three sources: A percentage markup (15% or less) from media buys; a 17.65% markup for materials and services billed the client, and the fee charged the client.

■ Billings: Billings are short for "capitalized billings," which are the sum of three types of agency activity: Total commissionable billings for ad space and time; gross billings to clients for materials like artwork, research and so on for services when supplied or performed by organizations other than the agency, and capitalized fees. Fees are capitalized by multiplying fees by 6.67. This makes an equivalent of fee income and commissions from media billings by treating fees as if they were a media commission. The 6.67 multiplier is the quotient of 100 divided by 15 (the media commission).

■ Billings by media: This section basically is a breakdown of the commissionable media total reported under U.S. volume stats. Media bought on a fee basis is included in the media breakout as well. Indeed, Pretty Good's media breakout totaled $1.5 billion, which is $146 million more than it reported for commissionable media. Also Pretty Good did not report media in 1987, so no percentage increases were available. AA encouraged more complete media data in 1988, and Pretty Good cooperated.

■ 1988 billings by major office: Most office billings breakouts were supplied by agencies. Where they did not respond, agencies were asked to confirm Ad Age estimates based on published reports on individual markets and other criteria. For the most part, those who did not provide the necessary information responded to the estimates.

Annual Review

During Ayer's 120th year in business, its U.S. billings rose 7.8% and worldwide billings rose 10.7%. Ayer International billings' growth of 18% was weighted by the acquisition of the European business of Spain's SEAT auto manufacturer ($90 million annualized billings), and by Gillette's assignment of its $25 million in business to Ayer's European network. In Europe, it raised its stake in Ayer Barker, London, to 25% and reported plans to boost that to 56% within the next two years. The agency sold Direct Marketing Co., its Connecticut subsidiary, and opened three offices in Dallas, Houston and Atlanta respectively. The agency's Atlanta office services Ayer's $200 million Burger King account, while the Dallas unit oversees the $55 million J.C. Penney business.

Annual Review

Worldwide billings for 1988 were up a notable 15% with the stronger contributor being the overseas side, up 22. The agency credits both strong new business and growing existing business to the increase, reporting no lost business. A 12% increase in worldwide billings mainly from expanding facilities overseas is forecast for 1989. BSB is currently a leading agency in Europe and the outlook is optimistic as 1992 nears, which should bring a lot of new business activity.

Annual Review

Billings were up 18.5% in 1988 mainly the result of substantial increases from existing clients amounting to $13 million. A long list of small accounts accounted for $2 million in new business; the largest being Sukesha hair-care products estimated at about $500,000. There were no lost accounts. The agency is optimistic about 1989, and projects it will hit $120 million in billings, up 26%, even with the stagnant economic growth now affecting the Boston market and the threat of a take-over of major client, Prime Computers.

This merged unit, a combo of two agencies, Campbell-Mithun and William Esty, completed its first year with billings up 5.7% over combined totals for 1987. This Saatchi & Saatchi subsidiary expects 10-15% growth, a factor of current account growth and a full-year's returns from accounts or assignments gained last year, including two new assignments from General Mills—Oatmeal Swirlers and Presto Pasta. The merger, which occurred in mid-year, was made to give the S&S agency greater ability, gained through greater size and capability, to compete for new business.

This subsidiary of Y&R split up at the beginning of 1989 when HDM purchased Stone & Adler, the Chicago connection to the agency, to form HDM Direct Marketing Group with combined billings of about $50 million. Y&R did not lose total ownership because of its one-third participation stateside in HDM. New York-based Chapman Stone & Adler, the remaining Y&R subsidiary with billings of about $52 million, continues to be headed by William Sutherland, president. As one operating unit in 1988, CS&A experienced an 11.6% growth in billings, 40% of it abetted by new account gains, Navistar, Alabama Space & Rocket Center; Allergan and Salex, and by growth from existing clients making up 60%. Virtually all agency billings growth was in its direct mail sequence. 1989 is expected to produce 15% growth with the same billings split as last year of 60% growth from existing billings and 40% new business.

Annual Review

Some 53% total growth in billings is expected in 1989, coming largely from accounts acquired in late 1988, including Nissan Regional Dealers ($70-$80 million annualized), Dell Computers ($7-$10 million) and New York Life Insurance. U.S. billings for 1988 were up 42.9% as new business totaled $80 million, growth from existing clients hit $115 million and lost business totaled $25 million. Opened were three regional offices in Atlanta, Dallas and Chicago to handle Nissan. An office in Toronto also was founded. C/D bought Anderson & Lembke, a business-to-business agency in Stamford, Conn., that bills $54 million, and acquired the PR company that handles Nissan, Bob Thomas & Associates, Redondo Beach, Calif. In early 1989, much of Australia's Mojo MDA Group was acquired. Chiat/Day also weathered the defection in October of three senior execs from its Venice, Calif., headquarters—Greg Helm, former senior vp-general manager, and John Stein and Jean Robaire, former vp-associate creative directors. They formed the agency, Stein, Robaire & Helm.

This Ogilvy Group subsidiary had a moderate 7.1% gain in billings for 1988 helped mainly by a 10% increase in billings in the Seattle headquarters office. Increased spending by existing client Weyerhaeuser played a major role in the billings gain. However, flat billings growth was recorded in the Portland, Ore., and Salt Lake City offices. FOR RICHER

$37,353

The Cable Guide's got the audience you want to reach. They're affluent. They're young. And there are over 17,000,000 of them, with a median HHI of over $37,000. That makes them richer than the readers of TV Guide, Better Homes and Gardens, and even Town and Country.

They're the pay-cable households who can afford to pay for choice. They're the audience that's elusive to the networks, yet exclusive to The Cable Guide.

So why not make The Cable Guide your choice? You'll be richer for the experience.

This Y&R subsidiary experienced a 4.6% increase in billings in 1988 due to major account gains and the expansion of services for existing clients such as Deere & Co. and the Iowa State Lottery. CME&Z estimates that 1988 losses will be offset by the acquisition of the Holiday Rambler account late in the year. The agency is projecting an approximate 10-15% growth for 1989 based on solidifying existing advertising and public relations and expanding services into sales promotion, marketing, video production and co-op. Annual Review

Increases from Glendale Federal's acquisition of another savings and loan company as well as boosts in McDonald's sales volume were major contributors to this newly named agency's growth from existing business which came to a total of $9.1 million. Along with this growth activity, the agency received $2.5 million in new business making its totals just enough to save the agency from overall decreases in 1988 as $10.1 million in billings was suffered in lost accounts including Krauses Sofa Factory ($6 million annualized). A billings growth of 10% is expected for 1989 because of favorable sales from existing clients.

Annual Review

Worldwide billings went up 13.1% spurred by moderate growth both domestically (up 8.5%) and internationally (up 5.3%). Several new accounts helped domestic growth, including New York State Lottery estimated at $18.5 million and Ralston Purina's $7 million account for Meow Mix. A major step toward expanding its worldwide network included a working partnership with Dai-Ichi Kikaku in its home territory of Japan, in the U.S., Canada, Southeast Asia and Europe. Dai-Ichi Kikaku owns 2.44% of Omnicom. Many key managment changes came this year including the addition of Robert Huntington as corporate vice chairman-coo. He came over from chairman-ceo, Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising.

Doremus Porter Novelli was spun off in 1988 and prior-year figures were adjusted to reflect current year agency lineup. Omnicom, the agency's parent, folded Fletcher Mayo/Associates' operations into Doremus in order to limit too many factions competing against each other. Annual Review

New business from Godfathers Pizza ($4 million annualized), Frederick & Nelson ($3 million), Keystone Resort ($2 million), Timex ($2 million) and Hamburger Hamlet restaurants ($1.5 million), along with $6 million in growth from existing business wasn't enough to offset decreases from lost business totaling $20.5 million in 1988. Accounts that were lost came from Gibraltar Savings ($10 million), Pizza Hut ($4 million), Raleigh ($1 million) and Famous Restaurants ($1.5 million), leaving the agency's billings 3% under 1987 returns. A brighter 1989 is unfurling, influenced by a 7% growth clip in new business, budget increases from existing clients and returns from two design studios acquired by the agency during 1988.

Annual Review

The shop regained much of the volume lost early in 1988. Any short-term impact caused by the December 1988 departure of creative director and co-founder Thomas J. McElligott is hard to assess. Billings for 1988 were up a hefty 21.2% but only 5-10% growth is anticipated for 1989. The bulk of the increase for '86 came from existing clients supported by boosts from Federal Express, Lee Jeans, Porsche and Timex. Losses totaled $20 million, primarily from US West, Wall Street Journal, Godfather's Pizza and WFLD-TV, Chicago. Mr. McElligott was succeeded by Pat Burnham but his name remains part of the agency title thus far.

Annual Review

On May 17, 1988, Foote Cone & Belding Communications and Publicis Inc. entered into an agreement to form a global business merger of all advertising and specialized communication operations in Europe. And in addition, an exchange of shares (Publicis owns 20% of FCB and FCB owns 26% of Publicis) and directors was made. The combined agency's figures appear as if the merger took place at the beginning of 1987, and as a result, overseas billings accounted for 58.1% of total worldwide billings and were up 37.6%. Domestic billings rose 12.8% to give a worldwide increase of 26%. The agencies big wins came from RJR Nabisco, Ashton-Tate, Mattel, Payless Cashways, Brown-Forman, Wisconsin Milk Mktg Board, Parfums Stern and Ballentine's. Major loses were Denny's, Frito-Lay, Long John Silver's and Gillette/U.K.

Annual Review

Billings in 1988 were down $9.9 million because of lower spending from clients Hasbro Inc. and Commodore Business Machines, as well as the loss of Stride Rite Footwear business worth $1.7 million. The agency expects overall 1989 growth of at least 6% over 1988 based on account gains, including Sharp Electronics ($15 million in annualized billings started in February 1989), Gillette Oral-B ($1 million) and Milton Bradley in the U.K.

AGENCY OF THE YEAR: RUNNER-UP

BBDO's creative stays hot; star-studded lineup grows

Past success, awards keep pressure on new work for such major spenders as Pepsi, Dodge and Apple

Steady creative craftsmanship won runner-up honors for New York-based BBDO. The agency continued to wow consumers (and ad award judges) with its work for Pepsi-Cola Co. In last year's cola war celebrity battle, BBDO and Pepsi continued to make use of Michael Jackson and Michael J. Fox, and added more personalities, including actress Teri Garr, America's Cup winner Dennis Conner and—briefly—boxer Mike Tyson.

In another case of tough-act-to-follow, BBDO brought out its "wedding" commercial for Du Pont as successor to the acclaimed Bill Denby spot featuring a Vietnam vet playing basketball on artificial legs. The wedding spot—also a heart-tugger—features a bride who earlier was in an auto accident but was saved from facial scars because of Du Pont's part in a windshield that shatters outward.

The agency also met the challenge of keeping up the quality of its Macintosh spots for Apple Computer, drawing applause for several of the low-key but effective commercials.

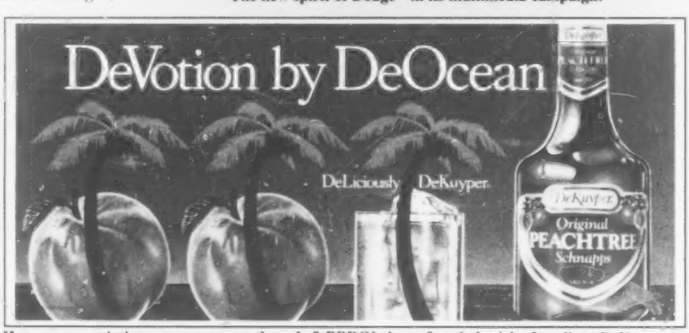
BBDO's 1987 work led the Clios with six awards, and also scored big in the International Film & TV Festival.

This year BBDO added part of a celebrity for Campbell Soup Co.'s Home Cookin' soups: the voice of actor James Stewart. He's not identified, but BBDO says research shows he's recognized.

Among the other creative work that won praise from AD AGE editors: Gillette Co.'s Atra shaving system ("The best a man can get"), Oppenheimer Fund's spot featuring New York Giant Jim Burt trying his hand at ballet, some of its spirited "New spirit of Dodge" work and DeKuyper's lively print campaign.

Recently, Allen Rosenshine returned to BBDO as chairman-ceo. He had been chairman of parent Omnicom. Bruce Crawford returned as president-ceo of Omnicom after a stint as general manager of New York's Metropolitan Opera. □

For longtime client Dodge, BBDO talks about "total performance" and "The new spirit of Dodge" in its multimedia campaign.



How many variations on a pun can there be? BBDO's bag of verbal tricks for client DeKuyper's seems to be far from empty.

OH, THESE SPOTS! THEY'RE DRIVING BUD AWAY!

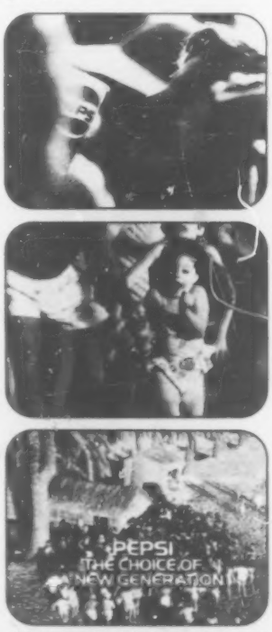
These print and TV ads for Lever Bros.' Sunlight detergent are credited with starting a mini-boom in parody ads.



Beachgoers in this Pepsi-Cola spot "ouch" their way across hot sand to get to the Pepsi booth.

Annual Review

Figures reported for 1988 represent only the Austin shop, where operations were consolidated in 1988 following the closure of full-service units in Dallas and Houston, which remain service shops. The reining in of its business, is the still relatively depressed Texas economy, produced a direct loss of $20 million in billings. The agency expects billings to grow 20% in 1989, a spurt connected to business gained in 1988 including two accounts previously lost—Chili's Restaurants ($10 million annualized) and Sea World of Texas ($5 million). Growth from existing clients, Adolph Coors Co., Southwest Airlines and Wal-Mart apparel, also will fuel billings. For 1988, new business totaled $41.5 million. Existing accounts added another $8.7 million while the agency did not lose any accounts.

HDM had a worldwide billings increase of 40% in 1988, broken down into 11.1% growth stateside and 45% abroad. The agency's power base remains outside the U.S.—88.2% of total billings in 1988 were in non-U.S. markets. HDM closed its Chicago office but bought Chicago's Stone & Adler as part of its plan to develop an independent direct marketing network. Growth for 1989 will come from new business and existing accounts, particularly 3M, Henkel, Peugeot, Damart, Philips, BSN, Colgate, Kentucky Fried Chicken, DuPont, S.C. Johnson and Jacobs Suchard. HDM is an amalgam of Eurocom's, the French agency group, Japan's Dentsu and Marsteller, a subsidiary of Young & Rubicam at the time of the merger.

Annual Review

The agency attributes its billings increase of 6.5% to higher spending by existing clients of $1.6 million, and $3.8 million in new business that offset losses of $800,000, largely the amount cut from the Sylvania budget. A 10% growth in spending is forecast for 1989, paced by new assignment, Spiffitts, a Dow Brands homecare product on which spending is expected to exceed $10 million. Two newly acquired food accounts also will have an impact.

our advertising sales have increased 33% over

"The Census is in — Atlantic subscribers buy cars frequently — at a rate that is more than two times that of the general household population — and they buy cars of high and quality — sometimes as much as nine times the national average. As far as the Atlantic is concerned, R.L. Polk is the definitive source for automotive data."
"Metropolitan Home readers are luxury car buyers and are almost six times as likely to purchase a luxury nameplate such as BMW, Cadillac, Jaguar, Lincoln, Mercedes Benz or Porsche than the average household."
"Should Next Transcript subscribers purchase cars at a rate 30% above that of the general household population, we'll consider the year a success."
Only MATCHMAKER, [illegible] wide study of magazine subscribers' actual buying behavior can give you this degree of accuracy on the numbers of 1988 new cars and trucks they purchased, by make and model, and how the percentage of those sales compared to the average household.
MATCHMAKER hones in on buyers, magazine by magazine, in every state in the country, with the exception of Connecticut and Hawaii. This thorough study allows you to target magazine subscribers with a high propensity toward purchasing your client's vehicles. Or conversely, it allows you to target buyers you want to conquest.
R. L. Polk & Co. has been the leading authority on the automotive industry for over 50 years. Only recently, however, has it trained its immense research capability on matching new car buyers to magazine subscription lists — with an extraordinary degree of accuracy. Using official government records, MATCHMAKER'S precise research numbers definitively answer the question: "Who is buying what?"

Leo Burnett Co., its U.S. billings propelled by double-digit growth, unseated Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide as the top agency "brand" in 1988.

Burnett, which until this year had held the No. 2 position for each of the three years the brand competition has been scored, recorded a 13.9% growth in billings to $1.77 billion compared to only 3.9% growth by Saatchi to squeeze by the British-owned brand by $25 million—an amount equal to 1.4% of Saatchi's U.S. brand total of $1.74 billion.

J. Walter Thompson Co. retained its No. 3 spot where it had fallen last year (in 1987 billings) after suffering management upheaval and major account losses related to its buyout by WPP Group, London. JWT, which had held the top position in both 1985 and 1986 U.S. billings, returned to the fast track in 1988, in notching a 10.9% growth in billings to $1.72 billion that left it only $19 million short of Saatchi.

The ADVERTISING AGE "brand" chart ranks agencies by pure advertising billings. As listed, these agencies are stripped of subsidiaries that have their own identity and/or deal in specialties such as PR, direct response, Yellow Pages, research or sales promotion. Under this criteria, the brand often is the reduction of the agency to a single name in multiple cities. This process allows subsidiaries to stand on their own.

The specialty units or subsidiaries were eliminated from the parent based on figures reported either by the subsidiary or parent for these operations. Where this information was not provided or incomplete, agencies were contacted for the information. When billings totals could not be obtained from the shops, they were estimated by AA editors and then presented to the parent for comment. Prior-year figures are constant, reflecting current year agency composition.

In this era of mega-mergers, reduction to brands provides advertisers with a better understanding of the agencies' family trees as they continue to branch out. The concept of a brand agency is controversial among the multi-layered agencies that are seeking to become "seamless," though they maintain separate identities in the case of some subsidiaries.

Y&R, which identifies itself as a seamless agency, ranked No. 1 on the basis of its consolidated U.S. billings, but came in at No. 5 among the brands. Minus subsidiaries, Y&R's total U.S. billings fell by 45.2%. The Y&R-named shops, however, registered a strong 24.9% gain in the comparable period—the best among the top 10 brands.

Also in top 10, McCann-Erickson, with brand billings up 23.9%, was second to Y&R in brand volume growth. It also improved its brand ranking from No. 10 to No. 7 in 1988. Grey Advertising, ranked 11th in overall U.S. billings—one notch ahead of Leo Burnett—also ranked No. 11 among agency "brands."

Among Omnicom Group's big agencies, DDB Needham Worldwide dropped slightly from an overall ranking of No. 5 in consolidated totals to a brand ranking of No. 6. BBDO Worldwide, reduced to its BBDO namesake, dropped from No. 2 in consolidated U.S. billings to No. 10 in the brand ranking.

The biggest year-to-year billings increase for a brand agency was recorded by AD AGE's Agency of the Year, Chiat/Day, at 42.9%. Conversely, the largest decline was 22.1% by LGFE, New York, the acronym of WPP's Lord Geller Federico & Einstein, which lost its biggest account in 1988, IBM.

Annual Review

Major losses including accounts from Friendly Restaurants ($10 million annualized) and Nissan ($500,000) helped push down billings 21% in 1988 as the agency prepares for a management leveraged buyout from its BBDO/Omnicom parent. The agency did receive some significant new business from Gillette ($2 million), Pizzeria Uno ($1.3 million) and pr for Braun ($800,400) among others. Higher spending was recorded by existing clients including Brooks Drug, Boston Edison, Converse, Honeywell-Bull, Ocean Spray, pr for BayBanks and direct response for First Mutual. Continued healthy growth from current business and full-calendar billings from new business acquired late in 1988 are the basis for IQ&J's 5%-7% increased billings estimate for 1989.

BUY QUALITY. BUY QUANTITY.

You want quality and quantity from your media buy. One Tampa Bay newspaper delivers — the St. Petersburg Times.

Advertisers in the Times reach an affluent audience. A single insertion nets more college educated adults, more chief wage earners and more high income households than the metro area's other newspapers. And the Times delivers more buying prospects in nearly every product category than any other Tampa Bay medium. Affluent readers turn to the Times, because it's the only Bay Area newspaper that speaks to them with Pulitzer Prize-winning authority.

It's a sizable audience, too. The Times is Tampa Bay's largest newspaper, delivering 44% of the nearly 1.6-million adults living in the four-county metro area and 49% of all adults on Sunday. That's an audience larger than Tampa Bay's other two dailies combined. And 95% of the Times circulation is concentrated within the metro area, so there's a minimum of waste distribution.

Discover the difference quality and quantity makes in your Tampa Bay media buy. Call the Times General Advertising Department at (813) 893-8249 or contact the CWO&O office nearest you.

Buy Tampa Bay. Buy the Times.

Annual Review

Projections for 1989 call for a flat year, which would mimic results of 1988 when the agency produced a moderate 7.1% increase in billings. Annual Review

Business is healthy at this healthcare advertising subsidiary of Omnicom and part of Diversified Agency Services, supported by strong domestic billings, up 31.7%, and by even stronger foreign billings, up 93.6%. Additional spending from current accounts was the bulk of the increase totaling $32.3 million. Only $1.5 million in new business was recorded, while no accounts were lost either at home or abroad. A 15% growth is expected for 1989, partly influenced by the acquisition of the Sandoz Pharmaceuticals account with annualized billings of $3 million.

The agency's worldwide billings rose 17.6%, entirely the result of a 19% increase in domestic billings. However, overseas returns remained flat. Both domestic and overseas expansion are part of the agency's continuing strategy. Ketchum acquired Botto, Roessner, Horne & Messinger, a $22 million healthcare agency in New York in the fall of 1988, the latest of a half-dozen acquisitions with $222 million in aggregate billings since May 1987. In a deal it made with Brunning Group PLC, London, the two shops formed Ketchum Brunning International, and have targeted Canada, Italy, Spain, Switzerland and Taiwan as markets for expansion.

Annual Review

Part of the growth objectives at this Backer Spielvogel Bates subsidiary, formerly known as Kobs & Brady, has been to expand international capabilities. Indeed, in 1988, worldwide billings almost doubled, increasing 95.8% with new overseas operations being the major contributor. Of this direct response agency's existing domestic business, Home Box Office increased spending while Fidelity Investments decreased. For 1989, it projects a 7.5% growth mostly from expanded client activity and new business helped by its entrance into the Canadian market with a new office opened in Toronto.

New business accounted for 14% of the growth highlighted by the Burroughs-Wellcome account, while larger budgets from existing accounts were responsible for the remaining 86% of the increase. The agency lost no accounts. Lavey is hoping for a 15% increase in 1989 billings from a mixture of continued spending from existing clients and from new business, including the major account gain from Miles Labs it acquired this year.

Annual Review

Although this newly named agency laid off one third its remaining staff one week after losing the IBM account in September and returning 1988 billings that were down 22%, it managed to hold onto Schieffelin & Somerset Co.'s $8 million Hennessy cognac account following a review. It also won a major new pharmaceutical product from American Cyanamid Co.'s Lederle Laboratories and new business from Australian-based Sheridan home furnishings store in U.S. and Motorola Codex—totaling $10 million, all added in the fourth quarter. The agency survived a major quake in early 1988 when six former execs left to form a joint venture with Young & Rubicam following LGFE's buyout by WPP Group. The breakaway agency, Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, besides involving partner defections, took some 40 former LGFE staffers.

Annual Review

Looking to provide an integrated marketing program, Lintas in May acquired Muir Cornelius Moore, a sales promotion shop whose client roster included IBM, and by yearend was actively seeking a pr agency as its next priority. Buying MCM did not hurt its chances in the bid for the estimated $120 million IBM business which in September was split between Wells, Rich, Greene and Lintas with the latter handling desktop products, including the Personal System 2 pc. In October Lintas:Campbell-Ewald was awarded the $30-40 million advertising and direct marketing account for Princess Cruises which recently acquired Sitmar Cruises, a C-E client. Early this year, C-E was assigned to the $20 million Meineke Discount Mufflers account. Late in 1988 Lintas:Hakuhodo, the joint venture between Lintas and Japan's Hakuhodo, closed its New York office. Lintas also bought Fahlgren & Swink ($126 million in billings) and MacLaren Advertising, Toronto ($155 million in billings).

Annual Review

A healthy $21.4 million in growth from existing clients, particularly in the special events and promotion areas, pushed up the agency's billings by 37.7% to seat the agency among the top 100 for the first time. It gained $1.4 million in new business and easily absorbed a $40,700 loss from a departing client. A 32% increase is projected for 1989 billings resulting from full-year returns on new accounts and scheduled national roll-outs on several new products as well as continued increases from other existing accounts.

Annual Review

The agency's loss of the $30 million Stroh Beer account, which led to layoffs of 15 to 20 staffers in the New York office, was blamed primarily on flat sales but was not helped by comments attributed to Chairman Michael Lesser about the lack of marketing savvy demonstrated by a Stroh competitor advertising in a gay publication. Other losses included $4 million MONY Financial Services account, $3 million Texas Commerce Bancshares and KPRC-TV, Houston. Gains included the $500,000 Johnson & Johnson dental floss business, $1.5 million six-month campaign for Dep Corp.'s Lavoris Mint mouthwash and $5 million Bertolli U.S.A. olive oil account.

Annual Review

Its existing client base reduced budgets significantly in second half of 1988 but the agency anticipates a return to near previous budget levels in 1989 and forecasts 25% growth. The Richmond-based Market Source was merged with the agency's existing direct response company, The Stenrich Group. Personnel changes got complex when the agency hired Kerry Feuerman as vp-senior copywriter and Danny Boone as VP-senior art director from Ford & Westbrook, recently bought by newly-formed competitor Hawley Martin Partners. David Martin left the Martin Agency he founded to become senior partner in Hawley Martin in August. The Martin Agency vied with the new shop for the $1.5 million Marriott Corp.'s Residence Inn account and won. Martin Agency is a subsidiary of Scali, McCabe, Sloves, which is part of the Ogilvy Group.

Annual Review

McCann, which reorganized its San Francisco office into "collaborative" teams functioning as mini-agencies, credits its experimental format with bringing in three new pieces of business including $1.5 million (annualized) Datacopy account, $5 million Vipont Pharmaceutical account and $6 million Washington State Apple Commission account shared with Seattle office. The San Francisco office ranked third in 1988 agency billings behind New York and Detroit and ahead of six other offices, all of which contributed to a strong 22% gain in U.S. billings. Helping boost billings was a full-year's reporting from Geers Gross's U.S. operations, a unit with $130 million in billings purchased in late 1987, and Phillips-Ramsey, an agency with offices in Phoenix and San Diego with billings of $53 million that became part of McCann-Erickson in July, 1988. Among personnel changes, John J. McNamara, president-coo, announced his retirement in early 1989.

Annual Review

The agency lost $33.9 million with the merger of client Piedmont Airlines with US Air, and the loss of Benihana of Toyko. This was slightly offset by $25 million in new business gains including Braniff ($18 million annualized), Karastan Bigelow carpets ($4 million) and Hyde Athletics ($3 million). It expects 20% growth from two existing accounts—Norwegian Cruise Line and FNMA. But without factoring in new business or increased client budgets, the agency conservatively projects an 8% drop in 1989 billings to about $110 million.

AGENCY OF THE YEAR: RUNNER-UP

W.B. Doner & Co. mixes humor with ad messages

Agency also scores with some 'big ideas,' and wins international assignment for British Petroleum work

Runner-up W.B. Doner & Co. earned the attention of ADVERTISING AGE editors with ads that mixed irreverent humor with strong selling points.

Based in Southfield, Mich., and Baltimore, Doner also scored with several "big ideas," including turning the town of Hope, Ind., into a burger-free zone to promote Arby's roast beef sandwiches.

Another big idea won a worldwide ad assignment from client British Petroleum. It was an ad showing the many modes of transportation BP serves—diesel trains, jets, helicopters and semi-trailers—all seeming ready to converge on a motorist quietly filling up his car.

Humor is a mainstay in many campaigns for Doner clients. Even ads for Baltimore's zoo are no immune.

The "BP on the Move" spot ran in 20 countries, and Doner has now opened a London office to handle other BP assignments.

A couple of "what ifs" also scored. To introduce premium-priced Iams dog food, Doner showed what would happen if dogs and cats ran the world. And a tried-and-true technique—asking kids what would happen if there was no electricity—produced some humorous spots for Edison Electric Institute.

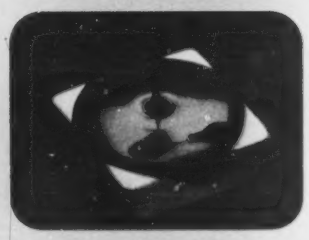
Outdoor message from Doner for client Baltimore Sunpapers uses a simple message—a twist on the eat-a-good-breakfast theme—to reach motoring commuters in the Baltimore area.

This scene is from a BP commercial showing the many forms of transportation British Petroleum services. Variations of the Doner-produced spot are being shown in 20 countries.

Long known for its retail work, Doner's humorous ads for Highland Superstores continued to win applause, as did its whimsical spots for Klondike bars. For Klondike, stuffy business types were shown as ready to act silly to get a free Klondike bar.

The agency isn't as attached to big-name presenters as some shops, but Doner did bring in comedian Martin Mull as spokesman for Red Roof Inns ("A good mint—$27, but it's good") and actor Billy Dee Williams for Colt 45 malt liquor. □

Comedian Martin Mull was brought in by the agency to be spokesman for Red Roof Inns.



People do strange things in the Klondike bar spots, including the "I'm a little teapot" bit.

1987, it picked up several accounts including the $2 million Reader's Digest domestic and international trade account.

Annual Review

O&M attributes its 12% growth in worldwide billings in 1988 to spending from new clients including Simplesse ($9 million annualized), Microsoft ($15 million), Tandem ($6 million) and Thompson Medical ($10 million) and existing business including new products from General Foods ($20 million), Hershey Mounds/Almond Joy ($12 million), Pepperidge Farm ($5.5 million), Mattel ($8.2 million), Sears ($20 million), Chesebrough-Ponds ($3.7) and Beecham ($4.7 million). These gains more than offset losses from Mattel Hot Wheels ($4.6 million), Schering ($20 million) and Hallmark ($40 million). Kenneth Roman became chairman-ceo succeeding Graham Phillips who remains chairman of the executive committee and oversees Scali, McCabe, Sloves and Research International units. O&M closed its Tokyo subsidiary as it withdrew from the Japanese market. Early this year heavy trading in Ogilvy stock fueled rumors of a possible takeover, however, no suitor has materialized as yet.

The $15 million creative account for Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes was the major addition in 1988, although short-lived because the agency lost it this past month. Other gains—Burlington Northern, Windham Hotels & Resorts and Community Coffee (each $4 million annualized)—and budgetal increases from existing accounts will push billings up in 1989, though probably not by the 30% projected prior to the LJS loss. The only account losses in 1988 were resigned. They included Grandy's ($4.4 million) and Residence Inns ($1.8 million). It handled Pier One Imports first national print campaign in 1988.

Annual Review

Riney had an active year winning the much sought after $100 million Saturn Corp. account but losing Austin Rover estimated at $20 million as a result. The agency picked up a $30 million Stroh's account but had to cut its ties with Anheuser-Busch. There were increases in the Perrier account but Shaklee Corp., San Francisco, was resigned because of conflict. All this coming and going produced flat returns in 1988, a year that got off to an inauspicious start following the resignation of the $75 million E.J. Gallo Winery account in December, 1987. Among the offices, New York was particularly hard-hit when the $15 million E.F. Hutton business pulled out after Hutton was bought by Shearson Lehman Brothers, and when Tom Rost, a top creative director, left to re-join Ogilvy & Mather.

The agency acquired Muhlfeld & Wolff, a $10 million shop founded in 1974, which became a division of RSH&S, and also bought Patchen Brownfeld in Phoenix, Ariz., a $17 million agency, and renamed it RSHS/Patchen Brownfeld. In 1988 the Rosenfeld shop handled a $4 million campaign for Chase Manhattan Bank investment products and a $3 million launch of Playtex's Jhirmack Silver shampoo and conditioner for gray hair. RSHS growth remained relatively flat at 5.5%. Total volume remains far short of the 1986 high of $149 million billings. However, RSHS seems poised to push billings much higher in 1989 with new account gains, particularly Burger King (East regional ad program), and the consolidation of acquisitions.

A buying spree in 1988 capped in November with the purhase of Group 243, the Ann Arbor, Mich.-based agency whose major account is the $50 million Domino's Pizza business, a sale also including an Atlanta office and a printing company. Earlier RRG purchased the Nathan Fraser Agency in Toronto, which reportedly billed $15 million in 1988. Along with its two other Canadian affiliates, Ross Roy Advertising, Toronto, and Commercial Associates/Ross Roy, Windsor, Ont., the agency's billings volume now placed Ross Roy among the top 20 agencies in Canada.

In 1988, an anti-smoking campaign for Northwest Airlines so peeved RJR/Nabisco (even though Saatchi & Saatchi only handled the Nabisco side) that it yanked its $70 million billings from S&S Advertising, New York. Also included in the $111 million in aggregate losses, were New York Life ($15 million) and VF Corp.'s Wrangler jeans ($10 million). Total gains of $128 million canceled out losses, with biggest contributions coming from Johnson & Johnson Stayfree and Hewlett-Packard (both $20 million) and Teleline ($10 million) and Yamaha Motors ($10 million). Prior-year figures were adjusted to reflect the current year loss of Cochrane Chase Livingston, which in 1988 merged with AC&R as part of a realignment within Saatchi & Saatchi PLC.

Annual Review

The agency expanded its multinational capabilities when it was acquired in mid-1988 by Roux, Seguela, Cayzac & Goudard, a Paris agency. TLK chairman-ceo Charlotte Beers became one of 5 owners of the French shop and she and Jacques Seguela hold the title of vice chairman of RSC&G. In August, accounts of the two-year-old O'Rielly O'Brien Clow (including Nina Ricci business) were folded into TLK when founder and ceo Walter O'Brien left to become president of Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos' New York office. On the account side, an estimated $15 million in billings walked out when Tatham was cut from the RJR Nabisco agency roster. In all, losses outnumbered gains as TLK dropped 10.2% in billings and cut employment by about 9%.

Among losses of 1988 was Ameritech ($8 million) after JWT won Bell Atlantic ($50 million). Kellogg's All Bran and Crispix ($20 million); W.A. Taylor & Co. liquor ($8 million); Kemper Group property and casualty insurance and Perrier Group (both $5 million); worldwide N.V. Philips small appliances ($7 million); S.C. After 61 years it lost Scott Paper Worldwide but retained the account in Canada, Malaysia, Spain and U.K. On the plus side, JWT gained $35 million media-buying assignment from Sterling Drug, itself acquired by JWT client Kodak; $18 million Nestle spot media buying, $10-$12 million first-ever national ad campaign for Thomson McKinnon Securities; $9 million Del Taco and $6 million Health & Tennis Corp. of America direct marketing accounts. Early in 1988, five senior executives were fired. Omnicom's treasurer Edward Haymes was hired as exec vp-finance and adminstration and a senior executive salary and bonus package linked to financial performance was established. It closed its 5-person direct response operation in Chicago, sold its Tokyo office building for $205 million, opened a Taiwanese office and merged its Hispania unit into Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados, Newport Beach, Calif. Mid-year JWT USA rehired Bert Metter as division chairman, a post he held before the takeover. William Lane, exec vp-general manager and chief creative officer in the San Francisco office relocated to New York to share co-executive creative directorship with CEO James Patterson. In Detroit, Charles Balestrino, former senior vp-managing director on the Ford account, was appointed exec vp-general manager succeeding Peter Schweitzer who previously was named vice chairman of the New York-based agency's worldwide operations. It restructured its strategic services department creating a national research function headed by Peter Kim. In Chicago, which lost some $100 million in the first few months of the new ownership, JWT created a business review board to monitor its largest clients and a consumer behavior group for research.

The acquisition of New York-based Altschiller Reitzfeld in late 1988 continues T-L's strategy to develop a third agency network as a subsidiary within Omnicom Group alongside BBDO Worldwide and DDB Needham Worldwide. The new shop, named Altschiller Reitzfeld Davis/Tracy-Locke, could bill close to $100 million this year. In its headquarters city, T-L also bought Stern/Monroe Advertising, Dallas, with $34 million in billings. In June, Phil Slott, former chairman-ceo of BBDO London, became chairman and chief creative officer at the agency. While a $61 million increase in existing accounts dominated the 1988 billings mix, new business garnered $45 million. Tracy-Locke was appointed agency of record for all of Dial Corp.'s consumer products spot broadcast buying midyear and resigned Pilgrim's Pride.

Annual Review

The agency projects 20% growth in 1989 based on a mix of new business, client growth and acquisitions. In 1988, it "arranged" to handle several accounts at the Douglas Turner Agency in Newark, as a result of a stroke suffered by the Newark agency's chairman, Douglas Turner, but said it was not buying the shop or paying for accounts. Nevertheless, some $10 million of business from Pitney Bowes, the Port Authority of New York and other clients was shifted to Venet's New York office and four Turner staffers were moved to Venet in similar posts. Venet lost the $1.5 million Carr's biscuit, cookies and crackers account from Shaffer Clarke & Co., gained the $2 million Domenico Tours account and launched a $700,000 ad campaign for its $4.5 million New Jersey Lottery account's new 5-card Lotto.

Annual Review

The wholly-owned healthcare and pharmaceutical subsidiary of Foote, Cone & Belding had a billings increase of 6.7% in 1988, not nearly as dramatic as 1987 billings growth which reflected the acquisition of Lewis Gilman Kynett's healthcare advertising division. The agency, with offices in San Francisco, New York and Philadelphia, gained and lost about an equal amount of business. Losses were paced by Merck Sharp & Dohme's Heptavax B telemarketing, and gains led by Zocor and Prinzide products.

At the tail end of the rankings is No. 588 Sweet Advertising, Mt. Morris, Ill., where the late Don Sweet started from scratch in 1952 working on poultry accounts. In 1968 he sold out to Thomas Hanson who added a partner recently. Sweet's base, broadened to include food and hardware, should produce billings growth of 10%-15% in 1989.

No. 1 Dentsu hits lofty $1.2 billion in gross income

billings increased 24.3%.

Dentsu definitely was not the only Japanese agency to benefit from the dollar's slide of 14.6% against the yen in 1988. (AA treats prior-year figures historically, meaning each year has its own set of exchange rates. Declines in the dollar can produce substantial volume growth among agencies with sizable operations outside the U.S.)

Of the top 50, 13 have Japanese roots. In 1987, nine Japanese agencies reached top 50 status.

Several had considerable upward mobility. Dai-Ichi Kikaku and Daiko Advertising each rose three notches to No. 22 and No. 23, respectively. Yomiko Advertising moved up two slots to No. 32. I&S Corp. and Asahi Advertising each jumped four positions to No. 29 and No. 35, respectively. Japanese newcomers include: No. 40 Chuo Senko Advertising, No. 41 Nihon Keizaisha, No. 47 Orikomi Advertising and No. 50 Man-Nen-Sha.

Considering Japanese agencies tend to have few operations outside their home country, the movement is noteworthy.

With a 4.3% increase in the franc's strength against the dollar, French agencies also benefited. The presence of the French also became more prominent due to the alliance between Chicago-based Foote, Cone & Belding Communications and France's Publicis, which created the No. 6 agency in the world.

Even those French agencies without major merger partners moved up. Roux Seguela Cayzac & Goudard jumped four slots to No. 18 and BDDP rose nine positions to No. 36. FCA! Group joined the top 50 list this year at No. 38.

U.K. agencies had less movement. While Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide and WCRS Worldwide held firm in their '87 posts, Lowe Howard-Spink & Bell climbed two positions to No. 19. BMP Davidson Pearce made its first appearance on the list, placing at No. 45.

Asia/Pacific is emerging. Mojo MDA, set to be broken up by Chiat/Day and HDM in 1989, moved up to No. 34 in 1988 from No. 40. A South Korean agency, Korea First Advertising, broke into the top 50 at No. 43. Korea First lead the list for gross income growth, skyrocketing 95.7% in 1988.

Other newcomers to the list include: AC&R Advertising, New York, at No. 44; Baltimore-based W.B. Doner & Co. at No. 46; Admarketing Inc., Los Angeles, at No. 48 and New York-based Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor at No. 49.

More non-U.S.-based agencies among the top 50 means some U.S. agencies have been squeezed off the list. In 1987, 32 agencies with U.S. roots made the grade, compared with 27 in 1988.

For the first time this year independent subsidiaries, whose figures are part of the parent agency's totals, were left off the Top 50 chart. The new procedure eliminated agencies such as Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s Campbell-Mithun, Dorland Worldwide, McCaffrey & McCall; Backer Spielvogel Bates' George Patterson Pty., WCRS Worldwide's Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, Lowe Howard-Spink & Bell's Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson, BBDO Worldwide's Tracy-Locke and Doremus & Co., along with GGK.

Position changes of U.S. agencies were a mixed bag.

Of those improving their standing, McCann-Erickson Worldwide, with an established international network to take advantage of the weaker dollar, broke into the top 5 from No. 7 last year. Grey Advertising; Wells, Rich, Greene, and Ketchum Communications each pushed their standings up a notch to No. 12, No. 25 and No. 27, respectively. Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos jumped to No. 39 from No. 47. Chiat/Day, which will surely move up in 1989 when its acquisition of Mojo is complete, moved up two spots to No. 37 in '88.

U.S. agencies taking a tumble included: Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, to No. 7; BBDO Worldwide to No. 8; J. Walter Thompson Co. to No. 9; Lintas:Worldwide to No. 10; D'Arcy, Masius, Benton & Bowles to No. 13; Leo Burnett Co. to No. 14; DDB Needham Worldwide to No. 15; N W Ayer to No. 20; Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt to No. 21, and O&M Direct Response to No. 30. TBWA fell to No. 31.

Along with Dentsu, Y&R and Saatchi, those maintaining their 1987 positions include Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide at No. 4 and HDM, a joint venture among Y&R, Dentsu and France's Havas at No. 17. □

Fischer, Justus Young & Rubicam includes Cato-Johnson and Burson-Marsteller. Brazilian agencies submitting figures for this report used ADVERTISING Age's exchange rate of 0.00025, which covered the period November 1987-October 1988. However, a major devaluation of the currency beginning in January 1988 resulted in a much lower calendar '88 exchange rate of 0.00260, and it is still moving. The 0.00025 rate was used to convert local currency in this chart. The original AA rate was retained when a Brazilian agency's report was consolidated with a multinational agency, but when Brazilian agencies were considered for the ranking of the top 50 agencies worldwide, the 0.00260 rate was applied to local currency. Also, due to the fluctuations in the Cruzado rate, AA did not compute percentage changes for 1988 and 1987 for gross income and billings.
